ALLEN NOW HUMAN IN REAL CITY

How you will laugh when you read the instalment of the REAL adventures of Joe Knowles or the "Doctor Cook of the Maine woods," which will be printed in tomorrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

In the meantime read the final and concluding adventures of the City Life Section's Fearless Primitive Man, Lewis Allen, of his final dash for corned beef hash and civilization. Now Allen says he started his primitive man stunt, but that he gave up, hungry, cold and disgusted, while Knowles never even—

Well, read the big, startling, laughing story in tomorrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

Today's instalment of Allen's adventures is entitled:

Back to the City (via Nature)

By LEWIS ALLEN (Primitive Man).

Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company.

PORTLAND, Me., Saturday—The largest, finest, best and most delightful city in the world is Portland, Me. No man can appreciate this fact unless he has tried imitating primitive man by living in the woods next to nature and thistles and things for two weeks with nothing in the wide, wide world except a gray moss "shift" and an enormous appetite.

Now that I have got into one entire suit of clothes, with shirt to match, and have cured my legs around the iron base of a restaurant table and partaken of a large plate of corned beef hash, I feel that I am almost human again. I will go back to where I left off.

SUNDAY—This begins my third week in the dense Maine woods trying to imitate primitive man. Being Sunday, I tried to direct my thoughts into appropriate channels, but all I could think of was one line from my Sunday School lessons—honest, I went to Sunday School once—and this line was, "I am naked."

The old trapper, Joe Gaume, came in yesterday and got my last week's notes, and I stole his pipe and tobacco. I felt that I was going to bent out Knowles, for I had a couple of good bone fishhooks, a bow and arrow, a brand new suit of gray moss with wild grapevine galluses, and a good little bungalow made out of hemlock boughs.

New Gray Moss Suit.

As usual, my moss suit caught fire about dark and I had to leap into the pond again. I couldn't put it back on again. You might just as well try to wear a bushel of pickled tripe as to wear soaking wet moss. It was too dark to pick another suit, so I curled up in the pine needles and went to sleep.

During the night I dreamed I had discovered Dr. Cook's records at the North Pole, but just about the time I reached them I awoke and was wandering about the top of the ice-bound earth with the temperature at 88 below zero.

MONDAY—This was only a dream, however. I awakened to find I was not at the North Pole, only in the Maine woods with nothing to wear, with my fire out and with the temperature at just 32 above zero, and he little pools forming a thin coating of ice.

Believe me, living in the woods with no clothes, at a time when the leaves are

FIRE AUTO HITS 2; DORCHESTER FIRE BURNS 2

Fire at No. 17 Freeman street, Dorchester, today, resulted in two people being burned and two others hit by a district chief's automobile.

One-half of the house is occupied by Edward J. Maguire. In a second floor chamber was John Murphy, Mrs. Maguire's nephew, who was smoking in bed while convalescing. It is thought Murphy fainted and his pipe set fire to the bedding.

Mrs. Maguire smelled smoke and found her nephew unconscious in the blazing bed. She carried him down stairs, burning her hands severely. Murphy was burned so badly on the legs that District Chief John A. Murphy sent chauffeur James Shea and his auto to summon an ambulance from Dudley street police station.

On his way back from the station the auto hit seven-year-old Catherine Delorey of No. 38 Linden street, so heavily that internal injuries were feared. At the same time the auto, on being swerved to one side in an effort to avoid the child, caught Frederick W. Simmons, assistant clerk of the Dorchester District Court, and pinned him against a wall, but without serious injury.

Louisville Women Boycott Evelyn Thaw

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 13.—The leading women's clubs of Louisville today announced a boycott on Evelyn Thaw, booked to appear at a local theatre December 31.

Manuel and His Bride in London

LONDON, Dec. 13.—Ex-King Manuel of Portugal, and his bride, Princess Victoria of Hohenzollern, arrived here today from Sigmaringen, Germany, where the latter has been seriously ill.

Ten Arrests for Smuggling Plot

LONDON, Dec. 13.—Ten of the crew of the White Star liner Adriatic, which arrived at Naples from the United States yesterday, were arrested today charged with smuggling aboard fifty returning Italian immigrants at New York, according to dispatches received here today. The Italians paid $20 each for their passage. The plot was revealed when they broke from the hold where they had been held without food or water for three days.

Shoe Shop Foreman Fined for Assault

BROCKTON, Dec. 13.—Alfred H. Newcomb of No. 1115 Montello street faced a charge of assaulting Catherine Barker of No. 112 Hill street, in court here today. Newcomb is foreman in the Gerge E. Keith factory. The girl employed under him came to him with a complaint and, it was alleged, he pushed her back to her work bench. He was fined $10 and appealed.

Big Cotton Brokers Ask Receivership

MOBILE, Ala., Dec. 13.—Marks & Oayle, one of the largest cotton brokerage firms in the South, have asked for a receiver to wind up their business. They declare that all creditors will be paid in full and that the action is merely to dissolve the firm.

5,600 in Christmas Rush for Europe

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—The transAtlantic Christmas rush set in today with the departure of six liners bearing 5,035 passengers and 6,733 sacks of mail. Most of the travelers were turning to Europe to spend the holidays.

Indianapolis Team Strike Is Settled

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—A settlement of the teamsters strike in Indianapolis was effected today, according to word received by Secretary of Labor Wilson. Twenty-eight hundred of the 3,100 strikers have returned to work.

Mayor Is Sitting Up Again Today

Dr. William Wahtworth Gannett, Mayor Fitzgerald's physician, today issued the following statement:

"The Mayor had a very comfortable night. He is sitting up again today. His improvement continues."

QUAILS BEFORE WOMEN

"Fresno Dan" fled from Melrose to New York today to avoid the expected beauty parade of his would-be-brides this evening. He declared that while at first he had thought a kind of review of those who have proposed marriage to him was a good plan, he had decided that he would not wait to see them.

Interest in the exhibition of feminine beauties who were expected at the estate ran high in Melrose today. As a result Chief George E. Kerr of the police department was asked to have a man or two in readiness to guard the estate should a request be made for them. An additional detective was added to the forces on guard at the house.

Two young women arrived at the Russell house during the forenoon, coming from Boston soon after 9 o'clock. Both declined to give their names to reporters, but one of them, a tall blonde who talked with a New York accent, said she had come to see Fresno by appointment and that she intended to be on hand with the others when the reception to Fresno Dan took place.

The morning mail today brought thirteen new proposals to Fresno. He said thirteen was his lucky number and that he might find his fate among them. He finished an early breakfast and then inquired for his mail. He retired to his library when the letters were handed to him and perused them all carefully.

"I am a little disappointed in this morning's batch of letters," said Fresno. "I like them to have a little life—a little spice. This morning they all seem kind of tame."

A letter signed by Millie of South Boston, received today, said:

Dearest Dearie—Can will excuse me for calling you "dearest," won't you dear? I see your picture in the paper often and you look so mild and sweet that I wish I had a mate like you to protect me.

I work hard but I long for a loving mate like you and dream of him five feet six inches tall, twenty four years old and weight 145 pounds. I am of good English stock and both my parents came from London. I am considered very pretty.

If you marry me, we can go out West and settle down on a farm and I can comfort you and love you in your old age. I hope you will consider me and answer my letter.

Affectionately,

MILLIE.

Another letter from "S. B. M." asking for a reply through the Boston AMERICAN was received and concluded with the words, "Sealed with a kiss."

Cummins Attacks Investment Plan

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—Senator Cummins today challenged the constitutionality of the provision of the currency bill compelling national banks to invest 6 per cent. of their capital and surplus in the stock of the regional reserve system.

"The courts will be called upon," said Cummins, "to solve the right of the United States thus to take property without due process of law. I shudder to think what may be the financial situation if this provision is retained in the bill."

Economy Program in National House

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—A program of rigid retrenchment in government expenditures was decided upon at a conference in Speaker Clarke's office today in which Majority Leader Underwood and the chairman and the ranking Democrats of the House committees participated.

It was agreed that there shall be no "pork barrel" legislation at this session. A public building bill was talked of, but was also the authorization of new rivers and harbors contracts.

It was also agreed that appropriations at this session shall not exceed $1,000,000,000, last year's figures, and that all annual budgets be sent to the Senate during January.

Speaker Clark declared that all appropriation bills would be carried through the House under extra pressure in order that Congress may adjourn early next Summer.

Rockefeller Seeks New Haven Control

New York and Boston financial circles were stirred today by the report that William Rockefeller is after personal control of the New Haven Railroad.

Brokers, acting for Rockefeller, are said to have been heavy buyers of the stock during the past two days. It is generally believed they will continue purchases with prices as attractive as obtaining since the passing of the dividend.

Rockefeller is said to have expressed privately an opinion that basically the road is all right and that in good hands it might be put upon its feet and become a profitable property again.

Cotton Pool Men Fined $4,000 Each

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—Five defendants in the Federal suit against brokers who formed a cotton pool in 1909 today pleaded nolo contendere before Federal Judge Grubb and were fined $4,000 each. The defendants were Colonel Robert M. Thompson of New York, Eugene G. Scales of Dallas, Tex., W. P. Brown and Frank Hayne of New Orleans and W. H. Rothschild of Texas.

PRESIDENT FAILS TO IMPROVE

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—President Wilson is not showing such improvement in his condition today as was expected and consequently will remain in his room all day. His temperature is normal, however, for the first time since he had his relapse, according to his physician, Dr. Grayson.

It has been officially announced that he will not attend the Gridiron Club dinner here tonight. White House officials are disconcerting any alarming reports about the President's health, but his illness is showing such a stubborn mien that he may be required to suspend all work until Monday or Tuesday.

Dr. Grayson has determined that the President shall entirely throw off the grip symptoms before he ventured out, holding that Mr. Wilson's undertaking up on taking an automobile ride last Saturday in the face of his Dr. Grayson's strong disapproval was only a slight setback. John Purroy Mitchel, Mayor elect of New York, who is in Washington for the Gridiron dinner, sought an engagement with the President today. The latter's illness prevented him from seeing Mr. Mitchel, however.

Would Change Words Over Court House

WORCESTER, Dec. 13.—Attorney Burton W. Potter in an address before the Worcester County Harvest Club here, attacked the inscription over the entrance to the Worcester Court House—"Obedience to Law is Liberty." He said: "That inscription is an untruth. During the history of the world, obedience to law has been tyranny. The worst criminals and often tyrants have often acted strictly within the law.

"I suggest that the words 'to' and 'is' be chiselled out and that the inscription stand, 'Obedience Law Liberty.'"

John Hays Hammond Praises Hearst Plan

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—John Hays Hammond, a principal speaker at the banquet of the National Civic Federation in the Hotel Astor, quoted William Randolph Hearst in urging a measure for federal regulation of corporations. He said:

"As Mr. W. R. Hearst has said, 'Business no more will return to competition than a child will return to crawling after it has learned to walk.'"

BULLETINS

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—Declared by the entire American fleet now in Mexican waters has been massed outside of Tampico, according to dispatches from Rear Admiral Fletcher to the Navy Department this afternoon. The battleships Virginia, Rhode Island and New Jersey are at anchor well off the city, while the gunboats Wheeling and Tacoma are further in shore.

VERA CRUZ, Dec. 13.—A troop train arrived early today from Mexico City and the soldiers were rushed on board a transport for immediate transportation to Tampico. Reports are persistent that the rebels had divided their forces and that an attack either had been made or is about to be made upon Tampico.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 13.—Three more towns were captured by Mexican rebels today. They are Zoplote and Pinotillo, directory of Tepic, and San Cristobal, state of Jalisco. At the last named place sixty federals were killed and the town looted.

SPAIN DEMANDS PROTECTION FROM THE U. S.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—New complications developed in the Mexican situation today that may result in forcing the American government to abandon its "waiting policy."

They were brought about by a demand from Spain that her subjects at Chihuahua City be protected by the United States. The rebels under General Villa are alleged to have threatened all Spaniards there with death, unless they leave. The Spanish demand was made by the Spanish minister, Don Juan Riano, through Secretary of State Bryan. Secretary Bryan immediately sent word to the rebel commander near Chihuahua that the United States would hold them personally responsible for any injury to foreigners.

Senor Riano called Secretary Bryan's attention to the fact that the rebel officers at Chihuahua have promised to spare the lives of all the inhabitants of the city except the Spaniards. The Spanish minister informed the State Department that he had been instructed by his foreign office to request immediate action in the matter.

State Department advices from Northern Mexico today reported that train and telegraphic service between Laredo, Tex., and Monterey, Mex., has been suspended. No report of an attack on Monterey has reached the State Department. The reported wounding of Mrs. Leita S. Worth near Ocuila, Tamaulipas, is stated by the Consul at Tampico to be without foundation. There are no American women in that locality.

Artist's Ashes Buried.

PROVIDENCE, Dec. 13.—Ashes of George Hitchcock, the Providence artist, who died in Holland, were buried here.

READY FOR ACTION AT TAMPICO

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—The battleship New Jersey arrived off Tampico early today, after a race to be at hand in case of need. Her arrival was noted in wireless messages from Rear Admiral Fletcher, who is in command at Tampico, and whose only instructions are, "Do as you think best." He is expected to protect refugees and property, but will not interfere unless it becomes vitally necessary to this end.

Rear Admiral Fletcher, commander of the American warship squadron at Tampico, has served notice on the fighting Mexican rebels and federals at that port that they must follow the rules of civilized warfare. Admiral Fletcher reported to Secretary of the Navy Daniels by wireless today that the battle was still going on there, but that he had made formal protest "in the name of humanity against the hanging of all prisoners taken by each side."

Barbarous Methods of Warfare.

This was the first intimation the government had received that the contestants at Tampico were using the same barbaric methods of warfare that has characterized former fighting in Northern Mexico.

Admiral Fletcher's dispatch further stated that General Aguilar, a rebel commander, is reported to have arrived just outside Tampico with 3,000 men. The Mexican federal gunboats Vera Cruz and Progreso are en route from Vera Cruz to Tampico.

Admiral Fletcher's protest, which he says has been transmitted to both the federal and rebel commanders, was brought about by the hanging of three rebels by the federals in full view of the shipping and the city. About sixty-five other prisoners also have been shot or hanged. Admiral Fletcher did not report what answer was made to his protest.

No foreigners have been injured or their property destroyed during the battle. The "neutral zone" established by the American commander and guarded by the guns of the American fleet, has not been violated. Arrangements have been made to care for all the Americans at Tampico, about 300. The army transport Sumner, which sailed from Galveston, Tex., today, will take the majority

A Recipe for Christmas Money!

Take two or three hours and go through all your unused household belongings. Select those which are still serviceable. Put them apart from the rest.

Then make a mental review of what you have around the house in the shape of furniture, rugs, portieres, etc., which you wish to dispose of because they no longer harmonize with present home decorations.

Decide finally what things you really have no further need for, but which would be useful to someone else. Include unused clothes in this inventory.

And, as a final measure of precaution, check over your list to see whether or not you've left out something which might well be sold. The making of this list will be the biggest part of your effort.

When it appears as a "Want Ad" the American will do the real work in bringing ready buyers to your door.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—Don Senor Adolfo de la Lama, Mexican minister of finance, sailed secretly today from New York on the Olympic for Paris, where he expects to raise funds for the Huerta government.

CHASE AND TAKE MAN FOR THEFT OF BOOKS.

After a chase through several downtown streets today, William Morris, 37, of Harrison avenue, was arrested on the charge of stealing two dictionaries valued at $10 from the office of Edward E. Babb & Co., No. 93 Federal street.

Direct Primaries, Put in His Platform by Mr. Hearst in 1906, Was Taken Up by Governor Hughes in 1907-8; by Roosevelt in 1910, and Finally Adopted by ALL NEW YORK PARTIES in 1913

THE INDEPENDENCE LEAGUE was the first political party in New York State to advocate direct nominations. The platform of the convention, held September 11, 1906, at which W. R. Hearst was nominated for Governor, contained a plank which urged:

"Measures facilitating independent nominations, providing for selection by popular vote of candidates for United States Senators, an effective corrupt practices act, and PROVISIONS FOR DIRECT NOMINATIONS."

The following year Governor Charles E. Hughes made direct primaries an issue with his party. But he recommended only "a permissive measure to give opportunity for a suitable trial of direct nominations."

He did not advocate the abolition of the State convention. But an Independence League member of the Legislature in the same year introduced a State-wide, mandatory direct nominations bill, wiping out State conventions. It was drawn by Clarence J. Shearn, and introduced March 7, 1907, by Charles F. Foley, Independence League member from Niagara County.

One year later in his message to the Legislature, January 1, 1908, GOVERNOR HUGHES said:

"I am in favor of direct nominations. In my judgment it is advisable the provision should take the permissive form."

The Republican bosses defeated Governor Hughes on this issue and ridiculed direct primary legislation.

Again, in 1909, after the Independence League measure had been introduced in vain at THREE SEPARATE SESSIONS, Governor Hughes, addressing the Legislature, said:

"One of the most striking developments of recent years is the rapid growth of the demand for improved methods of nominating candidates for public office. I therefore recommend a system of direct nominations by all parties for all elective offices other than Presidential electors."

The Hughes recommendation of 1909 was the beginning of the fight which wrecked the Republican party.

Roosevelt defeated Barnes in the State Convention and nominated Stimson for Governor on a platform favoring direct primaries. Roosevelt, addressing the State Convention, said:

"We should at once introduce in this State the system of direct nominations in the primaries, so that the people shall be able themselves to decide who the candidates shall be, instead of being limited merely to choosing between candidates nominated by bosses."

Governor Dix was elected. He feebly recommended direct primaries in accordance with the Democratic platform, which had at last adopted the idea. But it was again defeated. Governor Sulzer called a special session of the Legislature expressly to enact this legislation. He was overwhelmingly beaten.

It remained for Governor Glynn—the nominee for State Controller on the Independence League platform, which first made direct primaries a State issue in 1907—to achieve the result.

MR. HEARST FIRST PROPOSED IT IN 1906. GOVERNOR HUGHES ADOPTED IT (1907-1908). ROOSEVELT FINALLY ADVOCATED IT (1910). ALL PARTIES SUPPORTED IT (1913).

PRIMARY BILLS PASS; 7-YEAR BATTLE IS WON

ALBANY, Dec. 13.—The long fight for statewide direct nominations, with all conventions wiped out—a measure first introduced into the Legislature of 1907 by the Independence League in keeping with the party pledge of the league convention which nominated William Randolph Hearst for Governor—has ended in victory.

After seven years the Legislature, by unanimous vote, passed the bill recommended by Governor Glynn and prepared at his direction. It contains the salient features of the measure advocated by Hearst's American for many years.

The Compensation Act.

The other bills passed are:

1. A workmen's compensation act protecting ninety per cent. of the workers of the State.

2. The Massachusetts ballot for general elections.

3. Direct nomination and election of United States Senators.

4. A referendum submitted to the voters at a special election in April the question of whether a Constitutional Convention shall be held in 1915.

Such a program of constructive legislation has never before been so successfully advocated by any Governor.

Assemblyman Larrimer of Kings declared on the floor of the lower House last night that in one week the Governor and the Legislature had accomplished more than had been done in any regular session since the Civil War.

The Governor's success is the triumph of the rule of reason. It has not been the result of deal or trade. Not a job has been promised as the price of any vote.

Tribute to Governor.

Those who have searched for the secret of the Governor's remarkable accomplishment agree that his personality and straightforward manner of dealing with men has been primarily responsible.

The Legislature paid a remarkable tribute to the Governor. Instead of sending a committee to notify him that they were ready to adjourn without date, both Houses went in a body.

TRAIN DITCHED BY WRECKERS ON LAKE SHORE

CLEVELAND, O., Dec. 13.—One man, the engine fireman, was killed and the passengers were badly shaken up when an east-bound passenger train on the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern was derailed near Wickliffe, eighteen miles east of here, early today.

The accident was the work of wreckers, it is believed, and that fact that Alfred H. Smith, newly chosen president of the New York Central lines was aboard was led to the belief the wreckers may have hoped for his death. The road promptly offered a reward of $1,000 for the arrest and conviction of the wreckers.

The wrecked train was the New England Express—one of the finest trains on the road. A rail had been loosened, the spikes pulled up, and when the engine struck it the rail flew out—ditching the train.

President Stith, who was onhurt, was on his way to New York to take up his duties.

Lake Shore officials today are conducting an investigation, believing it was an attempt on one of train wreckers to kill President Smith.

Engineer Lamb said that following the crash he saw two men standing a short distance ahead on the track. One of them cried, "Are you all in the ditch?"

Lake Shore police think disgruntled trackmen, recently laid off, may have received and executed the plot. President Smith, who rushed to a near by brick yard to telephone for the wreckers, narrowly escaped losing his life. He was trying to break in a window when watchman Peter Anderson appeared with a drawn revolver.

"Don't shoot," yelled Smith. "I am A. H. Smith, president of the New York Central lines. I am trying to get to a 'phone."

"Yes, you are. Tell that to Sweeny," retorted another person. Smith finally convinced the watchman.

England Is Urged to Exhibit Anyhow

LONDON, Dec. 13.—The London Daily Mail says today, in an editorial:

"There are specific reasons which do not apply to Germany, but which make it highly desirable that Great Britain should hoist the Union Jack at San Francisco over a British government exhibit."

The fact that the United States last year imported twenty million pounds more from the United Kingdom than from Germany is given as one of them.

To Pare Estimates for Appropriations

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—Determined to pare down the estimates for the various appropriation bills and meet any possible deficit which may arise during the first year of operation of the new tariff law, sixteen Democratic leaders of the House met with Speaker Clark today to work out a budget. They also warned the spokesmen for the government departments that the appropriations will have to be cut down, but stipulate that care be taken to maintain a high standard of efficiency.

Mrs. Stroud Freed on Murder Charge

SHREVEPORT, La., Dec. 13.—On her plea of self-defence, Mrs. Delia Stroud was acquitted by a jury of the murder of her husband, Jesse Stroud, near Vivian, La., last April. Mrs. Stroud, who refused to divulge the cause of any of her relatives, went through the trial unattended.

Let the Babies Die Rather Than Trained Men of 40, Professor Sedgwick Advocates

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—Addressing a meeting of life insurance presidents, Professor W. T. Sedgwick of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology said it was vastly more important to preserve the trained worker of forty and above than the baby.

"A baby is a very useful thing," he said, "but it certainly is not of any use compared with a life at forty which has been well prepared at great expense and which ought to be efficient and which we ought to prolong as much as we possibly can."

'SHERLOCK' GOT HARVARD MAN, A CRACK SHOT

Stearns Poor is a Harvard freshman, and poor Stearns got a 22-calibre rifle for a birthday present.

From his room, No. 57 Ridgeley Hall, on the Quad Court, Poor looked out for a target. An arc light swung in the street below. He sighted—fired—and the light globe was shattered. Mr. Stearns was elated.

Sergeant Joseph McCorrey of the Cambridge police strolled along and investigated. In the pavement across from the dormitory he found a chipped place where the bullet had struck.

He put his eye down in line with the chipped pavement and sighted past the arc light. Thus he located a window in Ridgeley. With the janitor's com-ance he got into the third Counters' room—Stearns Poor being out—and again sighted from the window to the lamp and the bullet hole beyond.

Just then Poor Stearns—pardon—Stearns Poor—returned.

"Did you do it?" said the copper.

"I cannot tell a lie. I did it with my little twenty-two," admitted Stearns. "You're some detec, Mr. Policeman."

Stearns Poor was summonsed into court—breaking an arc light and shooting a gun. Fifteen dollars on each charge. "I've only got $25," said poor Stearns. "Give you till Monday to pay," said the court.

Stearns is poorer by $15, and will pay the rest Monday. He commented: "That's a Poor birthday present."

Ask Ship Concerns to Reveal Profits

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—Following the tactics of Louis D. Brandeis in demanding a showing of profits and loss by the railroads, representative James Manahan of Minnesota, today began the defense of the LaFollette seamen's bill before the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. A score of steamship companies' officials were present to protest against the expense which the proposed law would entail in providing lifeboats for passengers and a larger number of skilled seamen.

"You say you cannot afford it," challenged Manahan. "We will go into your own statements of your profits and loss [illegible] passengers you carry and see how expensive the change would really be."

REPORT FEDERALS ENTRAPPED BY REBELS OUTSIDE CHIHUAHUA

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 13.—Dispatches from Tampico and from Presidio, Tex., brought bad news to the Huertaistas today.

A message from Marfa to Presidio by the U. S. army teleprone, relayed by wireless to this city, was to the effect that General Mercado and the federalists who were guarding the rear of the refugees who fled from Chihuahua City, had been entrapped and perhaps annihilated by constitutionalists under General Herrera. This dispatch read:

"General Pascual Orozco, commander of the Mexican Federals in Ojinaga, formed a relief brigade today to be sent south to the assistance of the troops under General Mercado if they do not arrive within twenty-four hours.

"General Mercado, who was in command of the Federals guarding the rear of the refugees who fled to the border from Chihuahua City was scheduled to arrive at Presidio on Thursday, and it is feared that he was trapped by Constitutionalists under General Herrera.

"Federal scouts reported that the Constitutionalists had overtaken General Mercado's command near Lamula, and that fighting went on, but until today it was believed that the Federal force was heavy enough to overpower the Constitutionalists.

"Refugees arriving here during the night said that small bands of Federal soldiers had broken away from the main army and were raiding ranches in northern Chihuahua.

"It is thought these troops are deserters, although it was considered possible that General Mercado's force might have been defeated and scattered by the rebels.

"Hundreds of civilian refugees are with General Mercado and according to fugitives who arrived with the vanguard of the caravan, many of them have been forced to fight with the soldiers. Weapons were even forced into the hands of women, it is charged, when the attacks of the Constitutionalists became severe.

"Forty-five wagons loaded with provisions for the troops arrived at Presidio today from Marfa, and after being inspected by the customs authorities were allowed to cross the border. Forty-five more loads are on the way.

NASHUA, N. H., Dec. 13.—Frank B. Prescott, old-time hotel clerk, died at the Tremont House here last night.

Cancer of Stomach Curable, Says Mayo

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—Dr. William J. Mayo, famous surgeon of Rochester, Minn., before the Eastern Medical Society, declared that cancer of the stomach was the most common form of the insidious malady, and his experience that about seventy-three per cent. of the cases were such. About one-third of these were relieved by operations.

Morgan Among Lusitania's List

LONDON, Dec. 13.—Among the passengers leaving for New York by the Cunard liner Lusitania are Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Morgan and family, George Westinghouse, Jr., the Hon. Oliver Brett, heir of Viscount Esher, and Lady Lister-Kaye, formerly Natica Tmaga del Valle, of Louisiana.

"CASCARETS" FOR SLUGGISH LIVER

No headache, sour stomach, biliousness or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box now.

Turn the rascals out—the headache, biliousness, indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and foul gases—turn them out tonight and keep them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse your stomach; remove the sour, fermenting food; take the excess bile from your liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret tonight straightens you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from any drug store means a clear head, sweet stomach, and clean, healthy liver and bowel action for months. Children love Cascarets because they never gripe or sicken.

INQUIRY INTO BACK BAY GIRLS' QUEER ILLNESS

An investigation was begun today in the mystery of the strange illness of Miss Mary Ellen Hennessey, the wealthy Back Bay hospita[l] girl whose attempt to end her life by poison[ing] is a critical condition from this shock.

The inquiry was started by City Solicitor Hennessey of Lowell, brother of the woman. Attorney Hennessey would go to any expense in order to learn the identity of the person who gained him yesterday that she was dead in her apartments at 1 St. Stephen street.

Attorney Hennessey announced today that the voice he heard over the telephone was that of a man. Who this man was and why he said Miss Hennessey was dead are things Attorney Hennessey is determined to bring to light.

From the janitor of the St. Stephen street building it was learned that Thomas Hennessey of Lowell, another brother of the young woman came to Boston yesterday with an undertaker ready to take charge of his sister's body. At the house he was told she was at the City Hospital.

Father Saves Three Children in Blaze

Three children were rescued from the burning house at No. 19 Market street early today in a fire that started in the kitchen of Herbert T. Leonard's apartments and swept the building. Mr. and Mrs. Leonard, with five children, slept on the second floor. George, fifteen; Herbert, ten, and Florence, eight, slept on the third floor. Smoke awakened Leonard. He got his wife and the five children on that floor to the street, then ran back, woke the three on the third floor, carried the girl and half dragged the boys to the street. The loss was $2,500.

Would Ask Nations to Confer on Money

Cassidy Given Big Fall River Welcome

Harry F. Cassidy, the AMERICAN'S pure food expert, was given an enthusiastic reception at the Fall River Domestic Science and Pure Food Exposition last night. As a result, plans were immediately formed to build a permanent home for a pure food exhibition.

Mr. Cassidy attacked the packers for their baleful influence on the high cost of living. He charged that the packers kept their goods so long in storage they were able to control prices.

He blamed the packers for the raft of decayed food seized all over the country, which the packers were trying to work off into food channels. He denounced the packers for their gambling in the necessaries of life.

HOPE TO TAKE 'DEVIL' SENDER OF FATAL BOMB

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—"We have got to catch that devil or there will be no peace for any one."

With these words Deputy Police Commissioner Dougherty today detailed fifty of his best detectives to run down the man who sent the bomb which killed Ida Anusewitz in the office of the O. K. Bottling Company yesterday.

Deputy Commissioner Dougherty is confident that the man will be captured within a few days because of the excellent description furnished the police by Mrs. Andrews, clerk in the Adams Express office at No. 151 Bowery, where the bomb was sent. The police are mystified by the absence of a motive. They are satisfied that the infernal machine was not intended for the girl victim.

Mrs. Pankhurst Again Defiant

PARIS, Dec. 12.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the famous English suffrage leader, again defied the British government today. CALL MEETING IN BATTLE TO RECALL HURLEY

Homan F. Curtis of Salem announced today that he will call a mass meeting of Salem voters in the town hall Monday night in his movement to have Mayor Hurley ousted from office. The Salem charter provides for a recall if sufficient signatures are secured to petitions.

"I will have Town Hall for a meeting of citizens of Salem on Monday night," Curtis said today, "to organize a committee in charge and secure signatures for the recall of Mayor Hurley.

"All citizens are invited to attend this meeting and as many as care to do so will be afforded an opportunity to sign these recall papers.

"I decided to hold this meeting only after being urged to do so by many citizens, and it depends on how much interest is taken in the meeting as to whether I shall press the matter further.

"It is for the people of Salem to say whether they desire to finish the work they merely began on Tuesday last."

La Courier de Salem, a French paper published at Salem, joined the Hurley recall movement today in a three-column front-page article wherein Hurley is classed as the "rank-bat councilor of City Hall."

Fine Mrs. Reynolds of Outing Club $300

Mrs. D. Grace Reynolds of the Cedarcrest Outing Club of Braintree, in the Quincy Court today pleaded guilty to charges of conducting a liquor nuisance and of keeping and exposing liquor for sale, and was fined $300 on the latter charge. She was held in bonds of $500 until Wednesday when she will file an appeal.

The arrest of Mrs. Reynolds followed the raid three weeks ago. Judge Avery today suggested that the Braintree Select men discuss the liquor nuisance charge. It was understood that the authorities may ask that this charge be filed.

DREYFUS ASKS DIVORCE, NAMES HEAD WAITER

A new turn in the marital troubles of Mr. and Mrs. Louis D. Dreyfus, son-in-law of the owners of the Boston Globe by that name, is the filing of a divorce suit by the husband, in which he names Ralph Capuzzi, head waiter at the Providence Cafe Dreyfus.

He will follow his wife's plan, for separate maintenance, Mrs. Dreyfus declares she will have many startling disclosures to make when their respective theories are heard in court.

The Dreyfus disagreement results in the dispersal of the couple eight years ago.

"No more foreign husbands for mine," exclaimed Mrs. Dreyfus. "I married over-seas and paid dearly for it. The next one would be either an American or a Frenchman."

The heroine of the Boston-Dreyfus promises to make high finance social society go with a whirl.

"I have made up my body to show the critics I have endured Mrs. Dreyfus' expansion. I would dress in bed-ticking the way Frenchmen treat Lydia when—"

"My husband made a regular show of me. I was housekeeper, chambermaid, dressmaker and waiter until I was left to one or the other."

The "Dreyfus pride" is another thing of which Mrs. Dreyfus complained. She accused her husband's people of "putting on more airs than any three French" that they "have an American in the family."

ALLEN 'BEATS IT' BACK FROM HIS PRIMITIVE LIFE

falling and the water is trying to freeze is not a very hot proposition.

It began to rain. One of those cold drizzles. I tried to find some dry moss for a suit, but I couldn't. Everything was wet and I couldn't find dry sticks to rub together for starting a fire. Then I remembered that eighteen miles south there was a party of campers. Hastily designing an ulster of birch bark I hit the trail and trekked for the south.

Shivered so I couldn't keep on single overcoat on. Finally I came to the camp, and the people were having a merry time inside sitting down to a good dinner and wearing real clothes.

Suppose that for sixteen days you hadn't possessed so much as a lone suspender or a piece of sticking plaster —suppose you had wandered about as wide as a dewy and an egg in the wild for a living on frogs' legs until you were dropping and suppose you were shivering so with the cold that you couldn't see whether you were stepping on a rarer snake or a mushroom —suppose you hadn't had a square meal for so long that you couldn't remember whether a spoon had tines or a knife was round like a snake—and then you looked in a window and saw people wearing real clothes and eating real food and drinking real—something or other—what would you have done?

Reader, right in as you were! I suppose so, but I had never had possession. I went to an old camp fire and streaked myself with charcoal, made black rings around my eyes and then with bark cones to my ears to make them look like horns. Then I stood off a ways and groaned.

The people rushed out of the camp to find out about the groaning, and I slipped up to the camp. They came back, saw me, and with one yell they started running due west. By this time they should be just about finding Utah and going steadily.

I entered jauntily, barred the door, washed up—after eating everything in sight, picked out some good clothes and started out to walk to Portland, which I knew was no more than two or three hundred miles away.

Greyhound Too Slow.

TUESDAY—Walked all day.

WEDNESDAY—Walked all day. Nearly starved. Wished I had some money to buy food with and hire a team. Started to steal some chickens—the kind with feathers on—and got a meal.

Was chased by a constable. Got away. Stole some pies from the pantry window of a farm house. Was chased by a dog, but as the dog was only a greyhound, I easily outdistanced him. Ran over three rabbits and a couple of deer in my haste to get away from there. Wished I had some money.

THURSDAY—Passed several small towns. Found a sign board which read, "PORTLAND, 367 MILES."

Sitting on a woodpile in the outskirts of this small town I searched my pockets for tobacco. (They were not my pockets, to be accurate, they were pockets belonging to the man who formerly owned the suit to which they are attached.)

Talk about primitive man! He had more brains in his beardy kimono than I've got in my entire wardrobe an unatomy. He would have searched these pockets before. I found forty-seven dollars in real money. And there I had been walking and starving for nearly three days.

Went to a "hotel" in this small town, got a big meal, and hired a team. Drove twenty-four miles. There is a railroad station in this town, also a hotel.

When I went to bed I tried to scrape the sheets up in a pile and crawl under them. I have been so accustomed to sleeping under pine needles.

FRIDAY—Cool. Train for Portland. Arrived there late in afternoon. Bought shave and haircut and a hat, and feel much better.

It's Fine to Be Human.

SATURDAY—En route for Fremont street and my own little old room and some clothes that fit. You may call this primitive-man experience a fizzle. I call it something else, and dare you to print it.

There is only one satisfaction in all this, and that is over the manner in which I demonstrated how little the editor of the City Life Section knows what humor is. Take it from me, there isn't a grain of fun in trying to live as a primitive man. I hate to show the editor up in this manner, but really any editor who thinks there is anything funny in wandering through the forest with nothing except gooseflesh and pine needles in his hair should get a job editing the joke department in the Undertakers' Herald.

Knowles' Claims Baseless, Maine Hunter Declares.

(From Wednesday's Springfield Republican.)

Frank Howard, the Pittsfield hardware dealer, who has spent many months in the woods of Maine on hunting trips, stated yesterday that in his opinion the claims of Joseph Knowles, the so-called wild-man artist, are fakes. Mr. Howard's statement is interesting in view of the controversy of Boston newspapers just now over Mr. Knowles, who has been branded as "the Dr. Cook of the Maine woods." Mr. Howard has made a hunting trip to the Maine woods every Fall for the past twenty years and has just returned from one of these trips. HE DECLARED THAT ALL MAINE PEOPLE THAT HE TALKED WITH BELIEVE THAT KNOWLES IS A FAKIR.

Mr. Howard's trips have been to Hancock county, which is very near the seat of Knowles' so-called trail. Mr. Howard says that he does not believe that bear ever came to bait in the berry season. He believes that in the Spring after the long Winter sleep the bear will eat meat, but when berries are ripe bruin lives almost altogether upon them. Mr. Howard says that he has been given to understand that there are many abandoned lumber camps in the section where Knowles put in his time, which could easily be used by hunters or wanderers, and THERE IS NEARLY ALWAYS FOOD OF SOME SORT IN THESE CAMPS. One man that Mr. Howard talked with said that he found a barrel full of pork in one of these abandoned lumber cabins and also other things for comfort, including matches that could be lighted. It would have been easy for a man to have used one of these camps, says Mr. Howard. MR. HOWARD DOES NOT DOUBT THAT MR. KNOWLES ENTERED THE WOODS AND STAYED IN THEM, BUT HE DOES DOUBT THE CAPTURE OF THE BEAR.

The new garage of the Edison Electric Illuminating Company of Boston, regarded as the finest of its type in the East, will be the subject of a stereopticon lecture to be given next Thursday evening before the members of the New England section, Electric Vehicle Association of America.

The speaker will be Mr. Charles P. Smith of the Edison Company, who is in charge of the garage, and following this address there will be a visit to the garage in order that the members of the section and their guests may see its equipment. Mr. Smith is a practical man and will deal with this actual construction and operation of the garage and the automobiles.

LOVE ROMANCE OF THE THAWS NEARS CRISIS

CHAPTER XCV.

"A voice in hollow murmurs through the courts Tells of a nameless deed."
—Motto to Ann Radcliffe's "Mysteries of Udolpho."

Taking a fresh grip on her courage Evelyn proceeded with her terrible story of what happened in Wheeler's apartment that second night after Mrs. Holman went to Pittsburgh and left the girl in White's charge.

That is—Evelyn continued with the story she told she told Harry Thaw when he demanded a reason why she would not wed him.

After the little supper at this table White left the room for a few minutes. Then he returned.

He showed the apartments to the fascinated girl, beautiful pictures, wonderful decorations—and there was a back room and another table with a bottle of wine and one glass on it.

The unsuspecting girl, at White's urging, drank a glass of champagne, then came dizziness and darkness—

Meanwhile the girl's story was throbbing from her lips in shaking tones—the story that sent a wave of pity and horror shuddering around the civilized world, as it was flashed along telegraph and cable wires, the story that perplexed editors as to censoring it, the story that was the keystone of the defense, the that it was alleged to have driven a man to unreckoning homicide.

The girl continued to the end then Delmas, not to lose for a second the value of this frightful evidence, went right to the main object—its effect on Thaw. He asked Evelyn, who replied:

He was very excited. He would get up and walk up and down the room a minute, and then come and sit down and say "O, God! O, God!" and bite his nails like that and keep sobbing. It was not like crying. It was a deep sob. He kept saying: "No on. No on. Tell me the whole thing, all about it."

He sobbed in this way and walked up and down and every now and then he would come and ask me some particular thing about it. He tried to find out whether mamma knew anything about it and I said she did not.

Mamma thought, like a great many other people, that Mr. White was a very noble man, very kind-hearted and noble, and she knew nothing about that, and then Mr. Thaw made up his mind that mamma was very foolish and had been fooled by these letters and he said that it was not really her fault, only in the beginning she never should have accepted anything from him, never should have taken any flowers from him and presents, and that she ought to have known better than to let me go out with a married man.

Then Delmas asked of the girl, who had ceased sobbing:

"After you had stated this occurrence and the reason why you could not accept Mr Thaw's offer of marriage, did he renew his offer, or break it off?"

Evelyn replied:

Not that night. But that night he told me that any decent person who heard that story would say that it was not my fault; that whatever happened was not my fault; that I was simply a poor, unfortunate little girl, and that he did not think anything less of me, but on the contrary, he said that I must always remember that he would be my friend, no matter what happened.

Evelyn's narrative was not heard in person by her mother. But it was conveyed to Mrs. Holman over the telephone.

Finally, as the informant was repeating Evelyn's testimony, there was a wail of anguish and the receiver at the other end of the line fell clattering against the wall. A moment later a maid called over the wire: "You need not tell us any more. Mrs. Holman has fainted."

Court Gives $670 to Mellody's Wife

Judge Crosby found for Alice C. M Mellody and Clarence W. Rowley in their suits against her husband, William J. ("Honey") Mellody; her mother-in-law, Catherine Mellody, and Richard D. Landers to reach an interest in property in Stepton street, Dorchester. After paying off the mortgages from the proceeds of the sale there was a balance of $1,070. Out of that Mr. Rowley is to be paid $400, and the balance of $670 is to go to Mrs. Alice Mellody.

Chicago Mayor's Son to Wed Soon

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 13.—The engagement of Miss Lucy B. Cook, daughter of Charles H. Cook of this city, to Carter H. Harrison, Jr., son of the Mayor of Chicago, has been announced. The date of the wedding has not been set.

MISS GASTON IS SUPERB RIDER AT HORSE SHOW

Among the younger society girls of the Back Bay who have enteries in the charity horse show at the Park Riding School is Miss Ruth Gaston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Gaston. Yesterday she could be seen with a number of her friends exercising her steed around the circle. She rides superbly and was the recipient of rounds and rounds of applause. The show will give two performances, one this afternoon and the other tonight. Many prominent society persons will attend.

One of the most notable events of the entire show has been the capture of a blue ribbon by Harold O'Shaughnessy, a fifteen-year-old Boston boy. He rode Ratama, owned by Thomas L. Flynn of Fall River, in the short tail division of the class for middle horses. Danny Shea, a fifteen-year-old Brooklyn rider, won second and third in the class.

Alfred G. Vanderbilt shared honors with W. H. Hanley, winning three blue ribbons, the total number of his entries. Other ribbon winners were Miss Dorothy Forbes, Richard Saltonstall and the Misses Nora and Muriel Saltonstall.

Many young society belles are expected to attend the first of the early assemblies to be held at the Hotel Somerset tonight. Among the patronesses are Mrs. Rodolph L. Agassiz, Mrs. William T. Councilman and Mrs. Frederick S. Converse.

Milton society tonight will hold a dancing party in Town Hall, aggigned by those of the inner circle that are affiliated with the anti-suffrage association. The patronesses are: Mrs. Ellerton P. Whitney, Mrs. Robert Saltonstall, Mrs. Charles Sumner Pierce, Mrs. Henry E. Sheldon, Mrs. Carl Otto Zerrahn, Mrs. Clarence B. Denny, Mrs. Frederick Bird, Mrs. Phillip Y. DeNormandie, Mrs. Frederick S. McVicar, Mrs. William W. Churchill, Mrs. James Lawrence, Jr. and Mrs. Roger L. Scaife.

Fleury 'Love Serum' Derided in Boston

Deriding the serum by which Dr. Fleury, brainstorm specialist and Nobel prize winner, claims he can "cure" love, Dr. W. F. Councilman of the Harvard Medical School said: "It is absolutely all rot. I would not pay any attention to it at all." Dr. H. A. Christian, another Back Bay physician, said he doubted greatly if there was such a serum possible.

PLAN BRILLIANT FETE ON RETURN OF 'MONA LISA'

ROME, Dec. 13.—An international event of major importance will be made of the return to the French government of the priceless art masterpiece, "Gioconda" or "Mona Lisa," at last known. The painting, which was stolen from the Louvre in Paris and recently discovered in Florence, was returned to the French government by the ambassador at Rome, and was accompanied by brilliant ceremonies signed to cement the friendship between two governments.

The chief, Vincenzo Peruggia, will probably be committed to an insane asylum as a result of irrational statements he has made in defence of himself. Peruggia declares he stole the painting in retaliation for wrongs committed against Italy by Napoleon. Two carabineers have been detailed to watch the painting night and day until it is formally turned over to the French authorities.

'AIDA' SUNG FOR FIRST TIME THIS SEASON IN HUB

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

"Aida" was sung for the first time this season at the Boston Opera House last night at the opera. It was a very uneven performance, but redeemed for the best singing of [illegible] ever heard in the Boston Opera House. Mme. Margherita Dalmores, whose extraordinary powers have been indicated in earlier performances came into her own in the first big contralto role she has essayed, and revealed a voice as amazing in its volume as in its beauty.

It is rarely that a contralto is found to make all that is possible of the music of Amneris, but Dalmores comes nearer to doing so than any one I have heard recently. Her voice is so big that it is hard to control. Sometimes her tones spread and she wanders from the pitch, but such accidents are rare. On the whole a most extraordinary performance.

The balconies were crowded with the friends of Constantino, and the tenor received an ovation upon his appearance after nearly two years. Constantino has always been best in lyric roles, and it was unfortunate that the exigencies of the repertory compelled his debut in the most difficult dramatic part in Italian opera. The tenor was very nervous, and his nervousness did not leave him until the fourth act, when he sang with much of his old-time authority and fine tone. Constantino has always been a man who was not at his best upon a first appearance, and I prefer to wait until we hear him in a lyric role before discussing him further.

Miss Amsden has sung "Aida" much better than she did last night. Dramatically she is one of the most interesting of our Aidas. Ancona seems to improve with each new role in which we see him. Last night his voice was rich and admirably used. Lodlkar, as the high priest, was impressive enough, and the others in the cast were quite satisfactory. The pageant scene was better staged last night than ever before. The chorus singing was accurate and telling and the conducting of Moranzoni very effective.

This afternoon Mary Garden, Henri Dangeo and Dera appear in "Thais." Tonight "The Barber of Seville."

Festival Prelude by Strauss in Symphony

A festival prelude, by Richard Strauss, composed for the opening of the new concert hall in Vienna last season, was performed for the first time in Boston at the Symphony concert yesterday afternoon.

It is the most straightforward and tuneful piece yet turned out by the composer of Salome and Elektra, and it delighted the audience and surprised as well. Beginning conventionally and impressively with a hymn-like movement, the orchestra enters by desks and canonically to a magnificent climax. Then the chosen host of Strauss is shown by a series of grating discords, but harmony returns in a joyful theme which is worked up with true Strauss ingenuity to a stirring climax. Not a work which Strauss much thought very evidently, but more agreeable to most of us than some of his most ambitious compositions.

Josef Hofmann was the soloist, and he played with the brilliancy and precision for which he is famous. The Schumann Concerto is melodious and agreeable and Hofmann can play it like few living men.

Weingartner's graceful Lustige Overture received it first performance by the Symphony Orchestra, and Mozart's lovely First Symphony completed the concert. The orchestra was compelled to acknowledge continued applause by rising after the Symphony.

The local hockey "fans" will have their first opportunity to see the Harvard team in action tonight when the Crimson and Boston Athletic Association sevens line up for their first game of the season at the Arena.

The Harvard team has been practicing every day since the Arena opened and Coach Wilson, although greatly handicapped by the vast number of candidates, has whipped together a very fine aggregation.

It was thought by many that Harvard, on account of the loss of Harry Gardner, would be very weak this year in the goal position, but the manner in which Carnochan has been playing in the net shows that he will be able to fill Gardner's shoes.

Captain Willetts and Bill Claflin are both playing a strong game on the outer defence, while there is an abundance of fine material available for the forward line. Steve Hopkins, Bud Phillips, Wannamaker, the captain of last year's Freshman team and the former Melrose High School star, and Morgan are at present the first string men.

The Boston Athletic Association team has already rounded into shape and as most of the players were on the team of 1913 seven, they are working like a unit.

During the practice scrimmages B. A. A. has laid particular stress on combination play, which was one of the secrets of their success last year, and the accuracy and speed with which the forward line passes the puck will baffle any defence.

Pete Shortwell and Forrest Osgood are playing on the extreme wings for B. A. A., while Bob Clifford and "Trap" Hicks are working at rover and centre respectively.

Freddie Huntington and "Kiwi" Conley have not lost any of their cunning either on the offense or defence, while Cameron bury is the same Sherlock of old.

Amateur Games

The Avenue A. A. of Roxbury will be represented by a fast basketball team this season. Elmwood street gymnasium has been secured to be at home games. Anyone wishing games with the manager, Will Arnold, No. 12 Conway st. The line-up will be: team at home, forwards, Ring and Quinlin; centre, Bergin; guards, Arnold and Wright. Teams averaging from 90 to 120 pounds preferred. Address manager as above.

The Melrose A. A. of Charlestown has reorganized for the coming season, and has elected the following officers: James Boden is president; Joseph Hurley, vice president; Joseph Mahoney, secretary; Joseph Mahoney, jr., treasurer, and G. Ryan, assistant secretary. The Melrose team has secured the Bunker Hill gymnasium for its home games, and Manager Mahoney is now arranging to have the club establish a new record on the alleys this year.

The Emery A. C. basket ball team of the Neponset Club is open for games with any fast year-old team. At home Saturday and away from home on Thanksgiving day. Average range games with Manager Louis Thibodeau, No. 6 Pleasant street, Canton.

The Revere Town Crew is without a game for Saturday, and would like to get in touch with any team in that vicinity. Address Capt. Harry J. Cullinane, Revere, Mass., or tel. Revere-Highlands 240 or Revere 1350-M.

Quincy Y. M. C. A. teams first and second basketball games for Saturday. Phone Q 2-4.

The All Saints basketball team of Lawrence is willing to play an 125-pound team in or around Boston. Abraham Crowther, 65 Custer street, Methuen.

The Knights of King Arthur 2nd basketball team of the Immaculate Conception Union would like to meet any eighty-ninety pound team. Apply to H. F. MOSELEY, manager, Immaculate, Roxbury.

Co. D, Fifth Regiment basketball team will be known as the Fitzsimmons Five for the coming season and is anxious to arrange games with fast teams in the vicinity. The lineup will include Bill Mackin, captain; Sharkey, Whelton and Curtis. Write to a record for the team will play away from home until after February 1. Would like to hear from Gloucester, Haverhill, Hoosac Park, Stoughton, Natick and Wakefield. Address Wm. F. Whelton, Plymouth, Mass., or tel. Plymouth-Medford. Game furnished at twenty-four hours' notice.

The Malden Rangers, formerly the first team of the Malden Boys' Club, will be out to defend its title against any 118-120 pound basketball team in the State. Games on Wednesday and Saturday nights.

The Castle Hall team of basketball team of Jamaica Plain is ready to open its season and would like to hear from any strictly-pay 115 pound teams. Games away from home preferred. Write to Manager Lewis A. Bigelow, No. 113 Chestnut avenue, Jamaica Plain, Mass., or tel. Jamaica 1257-M.

The West End House basketball teams are again ready to resume activities on the floor, and expect to put the two of the fastest and fastest teams in the city. Besides retaining the organization. The first team will have all of last season's team, which was a contender for the championship of the State last season, winning nineteen of the twenty-one games played. The second team is exceptionally strong and has a remarkable record, having only two games in two seasons. Both teams have been very fortunate in securing the floor and gymnasium. Ward and Cassels. These teams are ready to fill their schedules with any 120-125 lb. five. Games at home Saturday second, home games to be played Saturday night. Address manager of first team, Joseph E. Jacobson, manager second team, No. 93 Chambers street, city.

KILLIFER BEST IN CATCHING BASE STEALERS

Bill Killifer of the Phillies, who might still be on the St. Louis American League club, were it not for the fact that Jim McAleer fired him from that team in 1909, was the best throwing backstop in the National League last season, according to figures. He thwarted 126 attempts to steal and was one of three men who averaged one or more men thrown out per game. The other back stops who had a record like Killifer were Mike Simon of Pittsburg and Jimmy Archer of Chicago, the last named, like Killifer, being an American League discard.

Hugh Jennings was the manager in the Johnson organization who shipped Archer back to the minors.

Simon averaged 1.01 victims in the game and Archer 1.02, the Pittsburgher flagging eighty-six men in the ninety-two contests, and the Chicagoan 105 to 103. Johnny Kling, of Cincinnati, ranked fourth, among the wind-paddists when it came to pegging out men who tried to steal; Ivy Wingo, of St. Louis, fifth; Otto Miller, of the Superbas, sixth; "Chief" Meyers, of the giants, seventh; Bill Rariden, of the Braves, eighth; Will Pfeeher, of the Superbas, ninth; Bert Whaling, of the Braves, tenth, and Tom Clarke, of the Reds, eleventh.

In every instance save one, the catcher who was most active in holding off base runners when they tried to do the Ruffles act, was the men who was most often called on by his manager to don the windpad. The lone exception cropped up in Cincinnati, Johnny Kling, who caught thirty-two less games than Tommy Clarke, having an average as a thrower that was .016 better than that amassed by his young teammate.

All told, there were 1,240 National League players thrown out in attempting to steal second, third or home last season. The Philadelphia backstops earned back 179 men, Chicago 169, St. Louis' 165, Boston's 151, Pittsburgh's 151, Brooklyn's 146, Cincinnati's 146 and New York's 104. The catchers' record in this respect is appended:

FOUR DISTRICT SOCCER TEAMS IN LOCAL GAMES

With four of the six Boston and District Senior League's contests around the city today, local followers of this fast growing outdoor sport will find plenty of games to pick from. The clash between the Charlestown and Lynn Fosse should be an interesting contest, with not much to choose between the teams. A good fast game is looked for.

The Swedish-American team will clash with the much improved Lynn team at Cambridge.

At Jamaica Plain the Boston Americans tackle Brockton in their return league contest. The previous meeting between these strong rivals resulting in a draw, today's game will be the "rubber."

Trimo will have St. George at Marcella street, while the General Electrics meet the Lynn Thistles at Lynn.

The Waltham-Carters game scheduled for Waltham today, has been transferred to West Newton Common, with a view of creating more interest in the game around that city.

Yamada Displays Skill for Last Time

Today will be the last opportunity for the billiard enthusiasts of Boston to witness the wonderful skill of Koji Yamada, the Jap, at the ball-line game. The players selected to meet the expert are Os good for the afternoon and Laurie at night. Good games should be the result, as they are about the best exponents at that style of play in this vicinity.

M'Farland 'Retires,' Facing Suspension

CHICAGO, Dec. 13.—Packey McFarland has once more declared himself out of the boxing game for good. The announcement was brought out, it is thought, by the unsatisfactory affair he indulged in with Jack Britton in Milwaukee.

As a matter of fact he is in very bad with the Wisconsin boxing officials for a refusal to obey orders about weighing in under the new law, and is facing a suspension.

Keel of Vanderbilt Cup Defender Cast

BRISTOL, R. I., Dec. 13.—The builders of the Vanderbilt syndicate yacht, which is to be a candidate for the defence of the America's cup, have cast her keel. The cast is believed to have been successful, as today 124,000 pounds of lead were cooling within the wooden moulding frame. By Monday it is expected the metal will have cooled sufficiently to permit of smoothing.

Cured His Rupture

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about it to any one who writes me. Edward M. Pullen, Box 779, 760 Marcellus Avenue, Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who have rupture—it may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

SOME DISCOVERY.

When Chris Columbus loaded here
he gained a lot of fame,
And history since then has pressed
his good Egotalian name.
When Perry landed at the Pole
(or was it Old Doc Cook?)
He craved the world to pause awhile, to listen and to look.
But each of these discoveries was an unimportant quest
Beside Professor Walter Camp's
discovery of the West.

Walter Camp denies the rumor that Yale will meet Chicago, but it was a good story while it lasted.

* * *

We are not surprised at Mr. Camp's admission that western football is strong on the offensive. Western football has always been offensive to him.

While there may be nothing in a name, Mr. Phelan is a member of a Y. M. C. A. tank team.

* * *

Dick Hollitzel comes to the front as the most eccentric man on a baseball team. He actually wants Joe Tinker's old job!

With Mike Donlan in Japan, Red Doolin is attempting to trade him to Cincinnati. But he wouldn't dare to do it if Mike were only here to defend himself.

The report that Garry Herrmann has not picked the manager of the Reds is a gross misstatement of fact. He has decided on the manager, but has not named the messenger boy.

After listening to Joe Tinker's story we can readily understand why Hank O'Day deliberately resumed his job as umpire.

A study of baseball statistics reveals the fact that a team's fielding average is almost as important as the color of its uniforms.

Harry Payne Whitney, speaking of the captaincy of the polo team, says he "does not wish to again take the responsibility." A man who splits his infinitives has no right to run a polo team.

* * *

Besides being the champion conversationalist, Tom Jones is the most intrepid manager in pugilism. He has matched Jess Willard two more fights in the East.

If it is true that Carl Morris batted Willard in their alleged fight, why has he not been indicted for assault with a deadly weapon?

* * *

A youth named Ruben won a wrestling match yonder eve, but as a rule the rubens pay at the gate.

To Abandon Varsity Hockey Team at B. C.

Owing to the lateness in getting under way, it may become necessary to abandon the idea of having a varsity hockey team at Boston College, but in this event a class tournament will be held and a regular inter-class schedule arranged. There is a lively interest among the students and it is certain that in a very short time the Maroon and Gold will be represented for the first time in its history by a hockey team. Among the more promising candidates are: Tom O'Hara, Whalley, Kinnahan, Wilson, "Buck" Hurley, "Jack" Atkinson, McCarthy, Connolly, O'Brien, "Jack" Gillespie, "Jerry" Shea, "Eddie" McLaughlin, "Jim" Linnehan, "Pat" Dawson, "Leo" Murray, E. McKenzie, "Tom" Devlin, "Scoop" Cogan, McCabe, Sullivan, Kiernan, Doyle, Desmond, "Jacks" Quirk, Dwyer, Gleason, Fred Deasey, Joyce, "Shorty" Keohane.

Arlington Boy Leader of Maine Harriers

ORONO, Me., Dec. 13.—Roger W. Bell, '16, of Arlington, Mass., has been elected captain of the University of Maine cross-country team for 1914. Bell has been a consistent performer in several events since entering Maine, winning points in which he has competed. His best performance, perhaps, was in the New England cross-country this year, when he finished second to Marceau of Dartmouth.

Harvard Squash Champion Beaten

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—A. J. Cordier defeated George Whitney and won his place in the final round of the National squash tennis handicap tournament at the Harvard Club. Cordier is a former captain of the Yale team, while Whitney played at Harvard. As the holder of the National championship Whitney had to play an uphill game against the mark of nine eight aces, two or no count on service.

TUOHEY GETS INSIDE "INFO" ON "RASSLIN'"

No use talking, these big wrestlers gotta quit kickin' George Tuohey around.

Tuohey is the w. k. referee. Last week a wrestler got peevish and "busted" George on his classic nose. But now the limit. A wrestler, all by mistake, grabbed George and wrestled with him for three minutes. George didn't do any wrestling. He was too busy moving through the air.

Reports today from Salem show that it was this way. George was refereeing a bout between Frank Gerhardt, the "Big German," and Carle Lemile, the Bohemian "Perfect Man."

The bout was fierce. George called time. Lemile started to rise, but Gerhardt doesn't understand English in the first place and he wasn't ready to quit, either. He grabbed for Lemile and got hold of Tuohey.

Not noticing the error in his wild excitement Gerhardt did to the horrified referee the things which he wanted to do to Lemile. Starting with a half-nelson the German put the scandalised Tuohey through the following manoeuvres: Body lift, head spin, crotch hold, body slam, Indian deathlock, full Worcester, mase, reverse English, hit-and-run, grand slam, sixty queens, trudgeon stroke, fadeaway, pass-in-the-corner, four hands around and the hesitation waltz.

All this time Tuohey was shrieking "Stop, stop," and trying to think of the German phrases he learned from "Cigling" Zander in those dear old childhood days out in Worcester.

Lemile—whom George was involuntarily undervalueing—was laughing himself to death in the corner. Finally, Gerhardt noticed he was hitting the referee. He set George down right side up and explained in sign language that it was simply a mistake.

George feels like a New Haven stockholder.

TINKER IS CONSIDERING BIG BROOKLYN OFFER; EXPECT HIM TO MAKE STATEMENT TODAY

BOSTON AMERICAN SPORTING NEWS

PHAIR'S SPICY COMMENT ON SPORTING TOPICS OF THE DAY, AND MITCHELL'S BASEBALL TALK

$25,000 FOR JOE TINKER IS RECORD PRICE

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—The Brooklyn Club of the National League broke all high price records when it paid the sum of $25,000 for the release and services of Joe Tinker, recently deposed as manager of the Cincinnati Reds. If Tinker signs a Brooklyn contract he will receive $10,000 of the purchase price.

It is expected that Tinker will make a definite statement today, announcing whether or not he will accept the Brooklyn contract. According to dispatches from Chicago, Tinker is pleased, but said that he would consult Charles W. Murphy, president of the Chicago Nationals, of which he was once a member, before making any announcement. He also stated that he would have to see President Ebbetts of the Brooklyn Club regarding his salary before he could say he was sure that he would accept.

The Tinker deal was one of three which brought the National League meeting to a close in sensational style.

Herzog to Manage Reds.

Charley Herzog, third baseman, and Grover Hartley, a catcher of the New York Club, were traded to Cincinnati in exchange for Bob Bescher, an outfielder, who is considered the fastest base runner in the old league. It is believed that this trade will result in Herzog managing the Reds next season. Herzog is quoted as saying that he would not play in Cincinnati unless he was given the managership.

The other deal was between the Pittsburgh and St. Louis clubs. Ed Konetchy, the star first baseman of the Cardinals, together with Pitcher Bob Harmon and Third Baseman Mowrey, were traded to the Pirates in exchange for John Miller, first baseman; O. J. Wilson, outfielder; Arthur Butler, infielder; Albert Doidn, third baseman, and Pitcher Robinson.

When Tinker made the statement that he would not play anywhere but Chicago or Pittsburgh, he did not think at the time that he would receive $10,000, and it is believed that when he considers Ebbett's tempting offer he will agree to sign a Brooklyn contract.

"What's happened to Brooklyn?" Tinker asked today.

"That is the last team in the league to which I expected to be sent. That is too much money to let me give any offhand answer and I never dreamed that Brooklyn would bid for me."

Giants Get Bescher.

It is expected that Herzog will come to terms with Herrmann in the course of a few days and that he will be made manager of the Cincinnati team for next season. In Bob Bescher, the New York Club has secured a very valuable man, and he will surely help to speed up the New York outfield.

Hartley goes with Herzog in exchange for Bescher, has been with New York for quite a while. He has never had a chance to show his real mettle behind the bat, however, because with "Chief" Myers and Wilson working, New York plenty of catching material. Then the addition of Larry McLean to the Giants made it practically impossible for him to get a show, so that he should be satisfied to go to a club where he will get an opportunity.

President Dreyfus and Manager Fred Clarke of the Pittsburgh Club are tickled to death with their deal. They believe that Konetchy will be of great help to the Pirates in next year's race. Next to Daubert, Konetchy is without an equal among the National League first basemen.

C. A. C. Veteran Offers Trophy for Athletes

A $200 trophy has been donated by former Colonel Thomas Pfaff of the Coast Artillery Corps, to be competed for at the annual games of the Coast Artillery Corps. It will be offered to 600-yard runners. The athlete must win it three times before it becomes his permanent property. It has not been decided whether it will be a cup, a bronze, or a shield.

Muldoon Is Captain of South Boston High

The members of the South Boston High School track team have elected John Muldoon of the senior class as their captain. John Farrell, the newly appointed manager, is seeking dates with East Boston High, West Roxbury High, Brighton High and Charlestown High. The following interclass schedule has been arranged:

January 12, freshman class meet; 14, sophomore class meet; 16, junior class meet; 19, senior class meet; 26, junior, intermediate and senior meet.

A RUBBERNECK TRIP THROUGH PEACOCK ALLEY

BEING A PERSONALLY CONDUCTED TOUR OF BASEBALL MOGULS

By FRANK G. MENKE.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—Ever been around the Waldorf during the National League baseball week? No. But you'd like to be, eh? Well come along with us. We've got to wander over there now and see what we can see and listen to anything worth listening to.

YES, right you are; there is a crowd here. The regular league season concluded Wednesday night, but the gang is remaining over for a day or two in the hope of making some sort of trade. How many? Oh, there are perhaps 200 men here connected in one way or another with major and minor league baseball. What's that? Why have they got that red danger-light down at the end of the corridor? Where? Oh, that's not a danger-signal, that's Hughey Jennings of the Tigers, with his hat off. See that lanky act, smooth faced, gray-haired fellow over there—the one with a sort of relieved look on his face? That's Charles Ebbetts, owner of the Brooklyn team.

THAT little chap with the bristly mustache is Barney Dreyfus, who owns the Pirates. Righto, it would be easy to tell him. Most every fellow from Pittsburgh smokes those stogies.

PUT your fingers to your ears—quick! Here comes that noisy C. Wainscot Murphy. If you don't protect your ear drums they'll be in danger of splitting whenever C. Wainscot is around. You've noticed Wainscot's clothes that C. Wainscot wears certainly are loud.

THAT ministerial looking fellow over by the desk—the fellow with the cane and the black-rimmed glasses—that's Harry Hempstead, president of the Giants. In that group over there are John B. Foster, secretary of the Giants; Jack Dunn, manager of the Baltimore International League team; Wilbert Robinson, new manager of the Brooklyns; George Stallings, manager of the Boston Braves; Jake Daubert, the Brooklyn first baseman, and Tim Murnane, old baseball star and now president of the New England League. That dark chap standing over by the cigar stand with a cigar in his mouth—yes, the one who just said, "Anybody got an infielder that can bat in the .300 class he wants to sell me?"—that's Clark Griffith, manager of the Washington team.

CHARLEY DOOIN, manager of the Philadelphias, is the fellow over by the water tank. Charley is appearing in vaudeville this week. The red-faced, portly gentleman talking to him is "Old Cap" Anson, who also is doing a vaudeville stunt in town. "Cap," as you may remember, led the famous Chicago Colts to many a victory back in the 80's and early 90's.

Governor Tener? I haven't seen him yet. He was up quite late last night, but he'll be around the lobbies here very soon.

THE little fellow sitting over there at the writing desk is Miller Huggins, manager of the Cardinals. He looks very quiet and subdued, but he can't keep that up. He won't always act that way. Such mannerisms have attached themselves to him since he took up the job of managing a ball team owned by a woman—Mrs. Helene Britton.

THE big fellow there, who looks like a "white hope," isn't one at all. He's Larry McLean, catcher of the Giants. Larry is very unhappy. He used to be with the Cardinals. He was promised $600 if he remained on the water wagon during the 1913 season. He did remain, but he did not get his $600, because the Cardinals sold him to the Giants before the season was over. Larry's been searching Mrs. Britton to "come through" with the $600, but the only thing she's favored Larry with up to the present moment are a goodly number of icy glares.

THIS room here—ah, you've guessed it, see! Yes, quite right; this is the haven for the thirsty. Who are all these people at the bar and sitting around the tables. Well, half of them are baseball magnates and managers, and the other half are newspaper men. You see, the baseball fellows bring the writers in here with the hope that by buying large amounts of liquid for them they will reduce the writers to a point where the latter will lose their desire for news concerning pending deals which the newspaper men yearn much to know about, and magnates wish to keep under cover for a while longer.

The writers, in turn, tote some of the magnates into this place and try to fill them up with wine so that it will loosen the tongues of the magnates. That's where no much wine and other liquid does hereabouts. The writers don't mind the cost—they are pretty well equipped with expense money.

Which just reminds us we have $1.95 left of the $10 we borrowed of the boss the other day. Come in. What'll you have? Yes, they have fine lemonades here. All right, waiter! Oh, waiter! Bring two lemonades.

Cornell Athletes Get Varsity Letter

ITHACA, Dec. 13.—The members of the Cornell football and cross-country teams have been rewarded by the athletic council, which voted to then the 'varsity "C." A few members of last year's baseball team who did not receive their letter last Spring have been awarded the "C." The awards follow:

Football—J. J. Muns, W. H. Fritz, Jr., S. S. Greer, A. F. Rees, Jr., G. A. Williams, H. G. Colyer, Charles Lehr, R. H. Mallon, J. C. Hirsch, C. A. Phillips, Charles Bates, J. H. Williams, Charles Barrett, W. C. Dail, J. Penk and M. Shafer. Basketball—H. Cossman, J. M. Ascoson, H. T. Lay, J. H. Dorman and Edward Bennett. Track and Cross-country—E. M. Fredericson, J. B. McGoldrick, C. L. Spalden, F. L. Bate and J. S. Hoffmire.

Leach Cross to Box Bud Anderson Again

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 13.—Leach Cross and "Bud" Anderson have been signed by Tom McCarey to fight twenty rounds at the Vernon A. C. in this city on New Year's Day. In a previous match Cross knocked out Anderson after a hard session of milling.

School Notes

The appearance of ice on Daws Pond, Melrose, has made the candidates for the Melrose High School hockey team happy. It is practically the first school team to get under way, contending with real hockey conditions, but the practice will surely prove a big advantage to the team in the early season games. With practically a veteran seven, Melrose is looking forward to winning the interscholastic championship this year.

* * *

Bill Besarick, the star Boston Latin track athlete and football player, will enter Exeter the first of next year. He is at present recovering from a recent operation for water on the knee.

Tate, the former Latin star, will enter Harvard next Fall. He played on the Lehigh University football team in 1912, but for some reason or another was not allowed to play last season.

* * *

George Sullivan will succeed Chester Hervey as captain of the Medford High School track team. Hervey has entered business.

The candidates for the Newton High School track team will have their first practice next Wednesday afternoon. Captain Litchfield, Boudrot, Rosetta and Rogers are the veterans who will report.

* * *

Candidates for the Middlesex School hockey team will be called out some time next week. The boys will do cross-country running in order to fit themselves for the season. This is the first time that the Canadian game has been taken up at the Concord school. John A. Franklin will captain the seven and Arthur Hayden will look after the schedule. He has already arranged several games and is in line for more. Those arranged are: January 21, Hyde-s High School at Concord; 28, Bowes and Nichols School at Concord; February 1, Milton Academy at Concord; 14, Noble and Greenough School at Concord.

The Wilbraham Academy football team has re-elected Wilbur Gebo captain of the 1914 eleven.

* * *

Percy Quinlan will lead the Needham High School football team next season. He played tackle this year.

* * *

The English High School hockey candidates will get their first practice on the ice next week. So far their work has been devoted to passing the puck in the school yard.

To Sell New Orleans Club.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 13.—President C. W. Somers of the Cleveland American League baseball club admitted today that negotiations are pending for the sale of the New Orleans Southern League club, which Somers owns, to A. J. Heilemann of that city.

Track Work Begins at B. C. Next Week

Track practice will begin at Boston College next week. The following men will come out for this sport: Captain McGovern, the star miler; Jim Linehan, Gallagher, Bowman, Higgins and Walsh, all veterans sprint and relay men; Butler and Quigley, distance men; Sweeney, Craven, Phelan, Fleming, Gillespie and Montgomery, hurdlers; Hines, Murphy, Halloran, T. Murphy, and Keefe, sprinters; Joe Linehan, a middle distance runner; McKnight, Drummey, Fitzgerald, McDonald and Dawson, weight events; J. Phelan, McManus, Norton, Nevins and Moseley. Arthur Duffey will coach the team.

Injury Forces Collins Out of 6-Day Race

Friends of Elmer Collins, the Lynn bike rider, were sorry to learn today that he had been forced to quit the New York six-day race because of a broken collar bone. Collins was thrown heavily in a sprint started by the Miller-Thomas team. He was teamed with Bobbie Walthour and up to the time of the injury had been doing gallant work. His team was on even terms with the leaders.

Gotham Offers New Wrinkle in Hockey

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—Peace has been restored in the Amateur Hockey League, the executive committee having voted to play the games in the first half of the league series with seven players and the final contests with six. The present rules will govern the early season contests, while special rules will be made to cover the games in which six men play. These will be adopted before January 15.

Michigan to Accept Harvard Invitation

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Dec. 13.—There is little doubt that Michigan will accept Harvard's invitation to a gridiron meeting next Fall. As soon as it was learned in Ann Arbor that Chicago had declined Harvard's invitation, the hope was expressed among the students here that a game would be arranged between Michigan and the Harvard team. The University of Michigan Athletic Association will hold a regular meeting this afternoon, and it had been expected that some action would be taken at that time in the way of opening negotiations for a game with Harvard.

Football Game Today at Soldiers Field

Two picked football teams composed of high school and college stars will play a game on Soldiers Field today, under the names of the Indian Club and All Stars. They will line up as follows:

Murphy and Ritchie to Battle Feb. 22

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Dec. 13.—Willie Ritchie the lightweight champion, and Tommy Murphy came to an agreement to hold their postponed twenty-round battle on Washington's birthday.

Murphy desired an earlier date, but the champion declined to meet him any earlier. The weight will be as in the postponed affair and the champion will receive the same guarantee of $12,000.

In all probability Murphy and his manager, Jim Buckley, will leave for New York to spend the holidays, but will return shortly after the New Year.

MITCHELL'S SIDELIGHTS ON SPORTS

THAT certainly was a big shift of playing cards by the National Leaguers. The magnates of the old organization have a habit of making wholesale trades. The first big one was twenty-five years of so ago when the Boston trimvirs bought the "big four," Dan Brouthers, Hardie Richardson, Charlie Gaudet and Charlie Bennett (it was Dave Rowe in that combination). It was so long ago it cannot recall from memory. Anyhow it was a big deal. And since then the National Leagues have made many important trades. There was one that brought Beaumont and Hulbe to Boston, and another that brought Dahlen, McGann and Bowerman here. Cincinnati and Philadelphia figured in a big deal three or four years ago—Lobert, Paskert and some pitchers for Grant, Bates and some pitchers.

When all is said and done are these big trades helping the National League? Would it not be better if the old organization spent more time developing young talent? The American League makes trades. It is true, but the club owners of the younger organization do much less of it than the Nationals.

It is possible that all the clubs involved in the last trade might be interested in the National League will be benefited—temporarily. But after a while when things settle down many of the players involved in the swaps will become indifferent and the result of it all will be that the National League clubs will have to develop a young player.

CHARLIE HERZOG rises to remark that he would like nothing better than to become manager of the Cincinnati Reds.

Can you beat it?

Not only is Herzog willing, not to say anxious, to manage a big league ball club, but he would not hesitate to tackle what is notoriously the hardest ball club in the universe to manage.

Again we say: "Can you beat it?"

Herzog has been the unsuccessful boy for years. He tried to tutor Fred Lake out of his job as manager of the Boston Nationals several years ago. He has always been reckoned a hard man to handle. How in the world can he expect to become a successful manager? If he doesn't know it, nobody can tell him. But if he became a manager his players would simply turn around and pay him off in the same coin he has been handing his managers for years. This column ventures to predict that Herzog would make the very worst manager that Cincinnati ever had—and they have had some bad ones; also some good ones. And this is no reflection on Charley's ability as a ball player.

CAPTAIN BILL SWEENEY, of the Braves, seems to be the only player to display a grain of common sense in regard to the managerial job. Bill's good sense in this particular was not recently acquired, however. Two or three years ago they wanted Bill for manager of the Reds and Bill fell for it. He was much pleased when the owners of the Boston Nationals refused to give their consent to his transfer to Portsmouth. But Bill has seen the light. A few days ago when Manager Gentry hinted that if Sweeney wanted to go after the job of Cincinnati manager the Boston club would not stand in his way, Bill wouldn't take the bait. He replied that he guessed he didn't want the job.

And Bill was wise.

CONGRATULATIONS are in order for the old National League. It has elected a "big man" for its president, it has given itself a good hot bath with plenty of soap and goods and looking epic and stout.

The newspapers dig it. The sporting writers hold the National League magnates up to ridicule only rarely they "back a fumbler" in themselves. In Governor Tener, they appear to have a fine man for leader and it is predicted that the old organization will take on a new lease of life and enjoy years of happiness and prosperity if the magnates behave themselves.

Cross-Country Cup Given to Cornell

ITHACA, N. Y., Dec. 13.—Cornell cross-country enthusiasts were surprised and pleased this week to learn that they had won the permanent possession of the cross-country trophy offered in 1905 by the I. C. A. A. A.

No one here had suspected this year's race was the fifth since it was offered but such appears to be the case.

The records of the race have forwarded it to Cornell again from Harvard, where it has been on view during the past year. With it came the announcement that it is Cornell's to hold.

A THRILLING STORY OF SOCIETY BLACKMAILERS

(Novelized by)

Ida Vaterbury

(From the play by George Scarborough now being presented by New York. Serial rights held and copyrighted by International News Service.)

"LESS than $500, I'd say," was Flagg's final verdict.

"But it's everything I have, and I promise to pay you up the balance," pleaded the girl, forgetting that it was not to a man she was talking, but to a creature of venom and spite; the enemy of decency and society.

Flagg rose—the time was ripe for action—the moment had come for Flagg to discover to her the full measure of his vileness—and for only one more safe second Aline was not aware of the abyss of horror yawning before her feet.

"Ladies are careless about paying," said he.

"Every penny I get will come to you until you are paid—believe me!"

He shook his head and finally tossed the brooch carelessly back on the desk.

THE FIEND

"I'm a business man—but the man in me is more important than the business."

Why, he was human and humane, after all, thought the elated girl. He had tortured her with the possibility of horror, but at the last he would not go through with it. He had a heart—it was vulnerable to a woman's suffering. She answered in breathless, unbelievable delight:

"You mean—I may have it!"

"I mean there's a way to get it." The leering face leaned closer across the desk. A new expression was coming into the crafty eyes; it was unmasked passion; it was new horror to pile upon the mountain-high horrors of memory and fact; it was leering suggestion to drive Aline mad with the fear and horror of her position in the web of the spider.

And she would not escape unscathed.

"You are very pretty, my dear," went on the thing of poison breath and foul mind. "And mock marriages are the real thing."

The girl winced. Her helpless weight was falling on her hands that lay white knuckled on the desk, her shoulders were bowed beneath the weight of degradation—the shame of being spoken to so by any man—but most unmerited of all, to become the creature desired by this venomous spider creature. And still he went on with his offer of horrible compromise—the price of a pink letter—written when sorrow had been only a cloud on her sky—written to menace her life with each line her pen had traced in forming the words on the pink school-girl sheets.

"You—you've a young person of experience—we could be friends."

"You're mistaken," said Aline coldly. She spoke with a breathless horror. So a man like Judson Flagg dared to think and feel—these things about the daughter of Gordon Graham—about the woman Larry Holbrook loved—about her—no, it was none of these he knew—his insult was for the girl who had—trusted Tom Woolworth.

"No—I'm not. You and Woolworth had three days together by the sea—we'd have a hundred—strung through the year."

"There's your money—I'm going," said the girl.

Flagg interposed: 'Oh, no, you're not!"

The girl looked around her wildly. She felt trapped. She knew how mad she had been to venture so far from love and shelter. A force within had impelled her, but now she was facing horror more horrible than the burning memory of those three days by the sea. At the sacrifice of all she had come to gain she knew she must go, now, at once, while there was yet time.

But from the wild moment when she had ventured alone into the web of the master spider—it had been too late. Life held hours of which she mortally could not dream—and for Aline Graham life could never again be the same. For every wild moment of those three days by a Summer sea—for every mad second of those minutes in Judson Flagg's den—the girl would pay, and pay full toll.

"You mustn't stop me," she cried.

Flagg had come between her and the door, and darker than the dark gloom of his own room he leered at his victim. He blocked the only exit she dared venture, for who knew to what abysses of horror—to what vaults and subterranean passages—to what Bluebeard chambers of grisly token the other doors would open her path? She must pass Flagg.

The man's voice had lost no tone of its evil portent—it was quiet, because the vitality of such vampire creatures as Flagg permits of no wild bursts of passion. For them emotion must be hoarded—and gloated over in the still dark, moment by moment. Aline's terror was very precious to her captor. He spoke in the sibilant accent of a snake's hiss:

"I'll keep the letter until you can come to terms—pay cash for it—or be friendly."

The girl tightened the hold of her cold fingers on that pink midst of evil—that cloud that was bringing such storm about her head. Holding her sad little letter to Tom Woolworth, her faithless lover of six years gone by—she took one backward step. Instinct pulled her from Judson Flagg. Instinct bade her fly while there was still time for flight. And the girl whispered to instinct: "We must parley with this man. Perhaps we can defeat him and go in safety."

"No. I must keep the letter," cried the girl in desperate determination.

She doubled around the table like the hunted thing she must become. If only she could draw him for one second from his guardianship of that door and then, winged by her fear, flee from his handicapped and evil old age.

Flagg left the door—unguarded.

"Give it to me," he cried in bitter anger.

The girl kept up her retreat—further and further from the menacing creature —away from the door—that would be a bulwark of safety for Aline.

Still she retreated.

"No! it's mine! You have no right to it! A letter belongs to the writer! You never had any right to it."

He started toward her—he would execute a flank manoeuvre and drive the wounded creature into a corner.

"Give it to me!" ordered Flagg "What the h—l do you think I am?"

She thrust the infamous yet precious pink paper into the bosom of her gown, caught back the clinging, impeding soft draperies—and fled in wild effort to escape her ruthless hunter—fled to the great door—toward the outside world—toward sanctuary—and Home!

IN HIS HANDS

She reached the threshold, her fingers fumbled against the wood—touched the knob—and Judson Flagg reached her in an evil, spider-like leap and caught her white wrist in a quick, twisting grasp.

Innocence cannot bear the physical horror of the clammy touch of evil.

"Don't put your hand on me!" screamed Aline, shrill with horror and degrading fear. That this creature of slime and crime should touch her!

In the Web of a Woman's Smile

Copyright, 1915, by International News Service

BY NELL BRINKLEY

I KNOW a girl with a smile. From her crisp metallic hair to the straps of her slippers she is what folks call "come." But it isn't the crinkle in her hair, nor the white column of her neck, nor any of these fortunate things—small ears and a beautiful turned wrist and a head with real ideas in it and a warm heart—that calls men to her like yellow jackets to a honey jar! "She has such lue eyes," offered one chap. But there are miles of girls with b-e-blue eyes! "Her hair is so gold." But the girls with "goldier" hair who are prettier than she would make a glittering girdle around the world! Only one chap confessed: "I don't know what it is, but WHATEVER IT IS, and whatever you are—man, woman or little kid—you answer right up to it and bring your heart on a platter!"

It's her smile! She is one of those women with a SMILE. All the angels in Paradise get out their song books and begin when she does smile. The sullen little kid can't hold out against it to save his slim little stem of a neck. The woman who is over-fond of masculine camaraderie and sniffs at the friendship of her own soft sex, who is tinctured with the bitterness of envy of all fair women, flops right over into the choir that sings her praises after 'bout half a dozen soulics. All childhood wreaths its arms 'round her waist and its heart about her image when she stops and smiles. But MAN—the grouchiest one of them all—glows like a kitten in the sunshine when her eyes crinkle and the red of her mouth curls away from the snow of her teeth; the bashfulest one spreads the gay wings of his fancy under the warmth of her laugh like a grateful butterfly under the sun; it's her laugh smile! It's as real as the color on the cheek of a peach—it's as soft as a sigh—as luring as the last-plucked string of a harp—as tender as a California valley in blossom-time! Sometimes when I look straight into the amazing marvel of her soft, soft smile the world grows dim and fades, and before the dearness of her face a web grows—a golden rainbowed web—and it rays out from the smile of her mouth in a thousand gossamer threads. And, caught by the wings and toes, and tummy and nose, are countless little pink LOVES—struggling and thrashing, caught coming for honey—blinded by the great light of her smile—giddy with its beauty!

This isn't like it. I must "scratch for a living" aeons longer to be able to put it on plain white Bristol-board. If it sux like it you'd be tangled up in this web also, my friend. How do you smile? Have you ever thought to look? Maybe you have a great one if you'd let it come oftener. Everybody can't entangle the world with the smiles of their mouth—but they draw closer all human kind—smiles do.

—NELL BRINKLEY.

Just Before Christmas

"I AM having such sensible presents this year," said the woman who is the heroine in this little tale, and then she went down into her shopping bag for the money to pay for a little tin mug, who, when wound up, worked a saw back and forth for fully a quarter of a minute.

She bought this for Johnny Smith, and when she reached the next counter she forgot she had wiped him off her list and that it was time to buy for Aunt Eliza, and bought a top that will spin three minutes. "Ha!" she said, "is for Johnny Smith."

She dispatched her gifts all day and reached home that night with ten express wagons for the right kid and a bag ing rakes for relatives who never had time to leave, and manicure sets where she had intended to astonish-bring wisdom to six carpet sweepers.

She had packed and wrapped Christmas boxes all evening, and when she sat supper the most tasted like the Merry Christmas stickers, and she baited the plate with a nice white, and so it tissue paper, and before she broke her bread she mechanically tied a Christmas ribbon around it.

After supper she rose with the baby in her arms and looked for the stickers and put it to bed. Half an hour later her husband walked in, and found his wife in a heavy sleep on the floor, while on the bed lay a big bundle done in white tissue paper, and wrapped in red ribbon, with a bunch of holly on top. A card attached read: "A small token of my love, with wishes for a Merry Christmas."

But where was the baby? The husband searched the room for it, and had about decided the neighbors had borrowed it, when the tissue paper bundle stirred.

With a cry of fright he tore off the red and green ribbons, unwrapped yards of white tissue paper and found the baby inside.

Its lips were fastened together with Christmas stickers, and twigs of mistletoe were sticking from its ears, while Merry Christmas tinsel was pasted in its eyebrows, and a Christmas card was laid on its heart.

The mother didn't intend to harm her baby, don't think that for a moment, in a fit of worry and absent-mindedness, brought on by the distribution of forty-seven presents which must go by mail in the morning, twenty-two that must be sent by express not later than day after tomorrow, and forty-four that must be ready by Christmas morn, twenty-one of which must yet be bought, three were unfinished, and eleven were yet to be begun, she had wrapped up her baby, and pasted it with Merry Xmas stickers, and had fallen asleep while waiting for the express wagon.

There is a warning in this little tale. It is to the husbands, that they watch their wives carefully and be tender and forgiving when they find their breakfast eggs tied up in ribbons, and Merry Xmas stickers and jelly served as breakfast food, for it is the season when no woman is safe from Christmas spirit in a accountable.

The Manicure Lady

"THE Missus was reading the society stuff about how to be cheerful and contented," said the Head Barber. "It was in a book that she got at the library, and must have been wrote by some old boy, because there was good advice about the blues in every line."

"It's easier to tell other folks how to be happy than to feel it up yourself," declared the Manicure Lady.

"That is what I said to the wife at the time," replied the Head Barber. "But there was a lot of gold dope in what she read, at that. One of the things I said in the book was that in order to be really happy nowadays one had to make up his mind to adjust himself to new conditions and the new way of living. It said that the man who clung to the belief of the father would find things on every side to make him sad and thoughtful."

"And that ain't no lie!" exclaimed the Manicure Lady. "I ain't so very old, George, goodness knows, but even in my short time I have saw a lot of changes that ain't for the best. It certainly makes me feel sad, for instance, every time I think how the old waits is thrown in the discard and them now dances has took the place. And when I wonder what has became of the old-fashioned spelling schools that we had when I was a kid, and that ain't so many years ago. I get kind of sad. Think of the kids that goes to school now having any spelling bees, or hissing bees, or cooty pulls, or catch riden? Not a chance. The boys is too busy to pick out the gang that they want to join, and the girls at the age of fifteen knows more than their mothers ever knew about things their mother's mothers never dreamed of."

"When I was a young girl we used to have literary clubs that met every Friday. We would read from the poems of Alfred Longfellow and Henry Ward Whittier and all them old geezers that know how to write real poetry, and it seemed to make us feel kind of lofty and inspired—the way the old gent feels when he comes home from lodge. The only kind of clubs nowadays is clubs formed for women to get their rights, and I think everybody can tell you the way Matt and Jeff is, there ain't one in a thousand that knows what the Pompeyou is as a English writer of the champion lightweight of Wales."

"Instead of a exchange of comforts bim, every time he gets a poem back from a magazine, to think that the people nowadays don't want the good stuff no more. This is what he wrote last night about just what we were talking about.

"There was a golden age of art
When all true poets was gave a good start.
Shakespeare had lots of admiring friends
Of the kind that their assistance lends.
Poets in them days did not starve
As their way to fame and success they carve.

But I, a poet of later times,
Go hungry when I cannot sell my rhymes.

I think if I had been writing then
I would have been one of the greatest of men."

"I don't think he would have had as much chance then as he has now," said the Head Barber. "I think your brother Gus in pretty fine right in this foolish age we are living in."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

YOU ARE A FOOLISH GIRL.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:—

I am seventeen and am simply crazy about a man four years my senior, who is employed in the same office. He sometimes calls me pet names and always tells me that he admires my beauty very much, but acts very cool to me otherwise. He told me he likes another girl bo knows, and every time he tells me that it is shooting my heart with an arrow. Tell me how I can win his love, because I feel that I cannot live without him, and every time he comes near me I just feel as if I can't keep from calling out "I love you."

HEARTBROKEN.

ONE as emotional as you needs a guardian until you reach years of discretion.

In the first place, you cheapen yourself when you give a mere acquaintance the right to call you pet names. End it at once.

In the second place, you don't really love him or you would hold that love too sacred to fling, overnight, at any man's head.

What you need is more self-control.

A Bachelor's Diary

By MAX.

OCT. 31.—The spirit of Hallowe'en took possession of my pretty nurse and of me exactly the same hour last evening. Soon after we had seen Richards plotting Annette safely off to bed, we put on coats and hats and started out. It was 10 o'clock when we left the house, and it is now 2 in the morning, and does a wink awake there is no use going to bed.

She wore a scarlet cape and by "she" I mean my pretty nurse, and I did not know until night what it means to be a woman out for one brief evening kick all the conventions off at one's heels. This scarlet cape, mind—scarlet coat and the conventions, but I claim that the color of the cape was to blame. No woman can wear a red cape and feel entirely sedate in it.

We have been to all the cafés in town and all the cabarets; we danced to the prompts song and dance of the one restaurant, and fed before each number of applause. I caught a waiter and we rode for an hour in a taxi to get back our breaths. I know that I can do for a living when my nurse goes to smash—buy a hand-organ and a Italian, as I did tonight, and have a pretty nurse to do a dance for pennies in it, and then pass around the hat. There were three or four hundred francs in my hat when we fled, leaving the hand-organ behind us, which a very disappointed young woman will carry tomorrow to some charity. The money, I mean, not the hand-organ.

She will be penitent. I know mine so well. We did nothing very far beyond the injury to our digestion. But a good woman likes to exaggerate her sins, and my nurse will go around for a week looking as if she had murdered someone. It must be very incongruous to be a woman.

THE COAT TO BLAME!

But the scarlet coat was entirely to blame. I have felt like anything from a Methodist prayer meeting every time I have seen her put it on, and I will persist in wearing it there after telling what will happen. When she treats those golden browns and dark grays Richards selected for her boudoir to the expression of a saint, every hair on her head seeks its proper and stays in it.

But that scarlet coat puts a devil in her eyes that isn't at all soothing to match it, and her hair flies around and there comes a flush in her cheeks her face in little wayward curls that make a man long to push each curl back in place. It is all right for a girl the age of Annette to wear a scarlet coat, but I shall revoke the nurse for appearing in such a defiant color. The sight of her isn't good for me.

November 3—It is just as I predicted. I have laughed many times over the memory of Hallowe'en, but the nurse never smiles.

"It is all right for a man to forget himself, and laugh about it afterward," she explained this morning. "Whenever I think that I—I, who was brought up so strictly—got up on the platform in that dance hall, and danced the tango, and sang—why, I am overcome with shame. You ought to be ashamed of yourself for getting me into it!"

"It wasn't me," I retorted. "It was the scarlet coat you were wearing."

I saw her later in the day start to put it on when getting ready for a walk and then look at it dubiously.

Then she run upstairs and came down wearing all black!

We were sitting in the library this evening, and I had Annette on my lap, telling her a story, when Tompkins called me to the telephone.

ONE SIDE

If you had ears, Diary, you would have heard only one side of the talk, so what is the use of telling you more?

"Hello!"

"Yes, this is Max."

"Oh," a little coldly. "It is you, is it? Yes, I'm better, thank you."

"No; no bad effects from the day I spent down town."

"How is my companion, you say?" (Front in my voice. "She is not here,"

"I can't tell you where she is now. I believe she is on her way to Europe."

"Yes, very pretty. Glad you admired her."

"I can't give her your message, though. No doubt it would please her to have won the admiration of a man as discriminating as yourself. You see, I haven't her address, and I never expect to see her again."

"Yes, it is too bad. Good-by."

Then I returned to the library to find Richards looking somewhat mystified. The pretty nurse wasted no time in expressing herself.

"You were talking about me," she said, "and you were talking to the gentleman who took us to lunch the day we spent down town."

"Well," on the defensive. "What of it?"

"Nothing; only I wanted you to know that I know."

Then she went back to the book, and I saw that Richards was trying to suppress a laugh. I presume my determination not to let that shallow-pated man see the curse again will confirm Richards in her suspicion that a romance is budding under her eyes, but I don't care.

I am too sick a man to be annoyed by any man's admiration of my pretty nurse. It isn't jealousy, at all. I hope I am too big a man to feel such a sentiment as that. It is for the girl's sake I feel that way. The man is wealthy and a spender, and if he came our here and paid her any attention it would mean late hours and dinners at midnight and all those things that are not at all good for a girl. As long as she is a member of my household I feel a moral obligation regarding her welfare. I should feel just the same if it were the cook or one of the maids.

NEVER BE HAPPY

I know the man is not married, but you see, in a way, that makes it worse. He might hope to marry her, and she would never be happy with HIM.

I will have a plain talk with her in the morning and tell her she will have to look a little less fascinating when she goes out with me, or otherwise I will leave her at home. I can't have a man I know calling me up and saying, "Hello, Max, who was the queen you had out last night? Are you going to introduce me, or do you intend to keep her all for yourself?"

It isn't the right way to treat a sick man.

Were Better Acquainted

The physician was a guest at a social affair, and at dinner was placed beside an elderly lady whom he had not previously met. Almost at once the lady, who was inclined to garrulity, began to talk.

"By the way, doctor," she smilingly remarked, "ought I to call you 'doctor' or 'professor'?"

"You may call me what you please, madam," was the physician's quick reply, "I am frank enough to admit, however, that some of my friends call me an old fool."

"I see, doctor," smilingly replied the lady; "but, of course, they must be people who know you intimately."

Seeking a Husband

By CONSTANCE CLARKE

"OH, is that the way you make them, Mary?"

"Sure an' Miss Peggy, how did you think you'd be makin' them?"

"Oh cut a hole out of the middle of each round thing, and all it up with jelly, and bake it."

Mary interrupted with a burst of hilarious laughter, and as I patted and pinched the crust for the tarts, I decided that it must be harder to be a cook than a nurse.

"You put the jelly in afterwards," said Mary, as she shoved the pan into the oven. And I, full of pride that I was doing my first bit of baking for Dr. Hammond, who was coming down to dinner, settled back in the big kitchen chair to wait for the tarts to bake.

Mary bustled around the kitchen in the most indescribable way, and I sighed and looked reflectively out through the glass door of the laundry. It was raining, just the kind of a steady rain that made me long for the cool pink and white couch up in the den, and that book that had just come up from the library. I hugged absently at my apron, and then with my thoughts still far away I went to the fact that Mary was speaking to me.

"Sure an' Miss Peggy, why don't you run upstairs and let me take care of the tarts? Who's to know the difference, child?"

But I said decidedly: "No, Mary. I must do it my own self. Next time I'll know just how it's all done, and Dr. Hammond just love tarts."

The tinkle of the telephone, and I flew upstairs.

"Hello, yes, this is Miss Dean; ish, Dr. Hammond? Yes, I'm very busy. I'm expecting company for dinner."

"You're not coming? Why? Oh, of course you can't in a case like that. Why do people have to go and get hurt, anyway? Yes, of course, I understand; don't you need me to help? I wish I could."

"Do you really? Well that helps some. Anyway I needed you to help me cheer up, it's such a horrid day. Oh, yes, and we're going to have tarts for dinner. Yes, I know you'd be sorry. Next time? Well, maybe. You see I'm making them myself."

"Of course I can cook. Please don't be jolly. Oh, no you won't, you'll be too busy to miss even the tarts."

"The tarts, perhaps, not you"—the words sang across the wire, and I sat down on the stairs in the dark and reflected. He really did want to come. And the thought that he would miss me even in the rush of an accident case, and the deepening of his voice when he said those long words—my name burned, and I put my fingers up over my eyes and wondered what had come over me. Just then, I wanted to be a nurse more than anything else in the world, because I wanted to be where he was. Then I allowed myself to dwell upon the delights of being a hospital nurse. The fascinating smell of the place, the restlessness and rush of it all. And then as it all came back to me that afternoon when I had first met him, the chloroform of his late under the electric light and the funny little impulse I had to rumple it up, I smiled and thought it a good thing that men do not always know what we women are thinking about. Peggy, dear, you are learning, every day you know a little more, and yet you're a little frightened you might as well 'fess up. Things are so very, very strange, and you don't know yourself as well as you thought you did, do you?

"Miss Peggy, Miss Peggy," came Mary's stentorian tones from the kitchen, "your tarts are burnin', sure, Miss, you'd better be lendin' to them."

And I flew to the rescue. "It's all right to be a nurse, Peggy," I scolded severely, as I pulled out the smoking pastry from the oven, "but it strikes me that you'd better learn to be a good cook first." But I took a whole lot better when Mary, laughing at my dismayed face, said good-naturedly, "Sure an', Miss Peggy, you never know your luck, next time you'll be havin' better luck with your tarts, too." Mary is a natural born philosopher.

Gone Before

A country minister driving to church with his new overcoat on the seat beside him, lost the coat en route, and announced his loss from the pulpit.

"Nearly beloved," he said, "I met with a loss this morning. Somewhere on the river road, while driving to church, my fine new silk lined overcoat, [illegible] of you find it, I hope you'll bring it to the parsonage."

"It's found, doctor," said a voice from the back of the church.

"Bless you, my friend. Heaven bless you!" said the minister, beaming on the speaker gratefully.

"It's found, sir," continued the voice. "I came along the river road just after you, and it wasn't there."

BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL NEWS Edited By Experts

Latest in Today's Stock Markets

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor.

Stocks were irregular today and receded after a firm opening. Towards the close, buying was resumed and they closed in most instances with gains. The New York market was unusually active, or was when compared with recent standards, share transactions for two hours totalling around 167,000.

At the close in Boston, New Haven was up 1 and Boston & Maine 2, while Fitchburg preferred advanced 3, selling at 71. United Fruit receded ½ and American Telephone was off ⅝ at 113⅜, having sold as low as 114⅝ during the morning. Among mines, Granby was up 1, North Butte ½ and Butte & Superior ⅝.

In New York at the end, advances included Canadian Pacific ⅝, Reading ⅝, Lehigh Valley ⅝, Pennsylvania ⅝, New Haven ¼ it closing at 67¾, New York Central ⅝, American Can ¼, Steel ¼ and Amalgamated ⅝. American Telephone was off ⅝ at 113¾.

The New York bank statement in brief was as follows: Average statement: Excess cash reserve, $11,097,990, increase $8,997,650; loans, decrease $22,448,000; specie, increase $2,756,000; legal tenders, increase $2,020,000; net deposits, decrease $18,547,000; circulation, decrease, $107,000. Actual statement: Loans, decrease $10,616,000; specie, increase $6,598,000; legal tenders, increase $1,606,000; net deposits, decrease $2,403,000; reserve, increase $8,335,150.

United Shoe Machinery Corporation

The Directors of this Corporation have declared a quarterly dividend of 1¾% (87½c per share) on the Preferred capital stock and a dividend of 2% (50c per share) on the Common capital stock, both payable January 5th, 1914, to stockholders of record at the close of business December 16th, 1913. H. A. COOLIDGE, Treasurer.

American Telephone Weakened.

American Telephone was a weak stock when markets opened, it going to a new low in Boston and New York. The decline was occasioned to Washington reports that the government is seriously considering the acquirement of telephone and telegraph lines. This affected Western Union also.

Prices were generally firm in New York at the start and for about half an hour. Among specialties Goodrich advanced a point. Reading was active among the regular leaders, advancing over a point. Among stocks to show early gains were Utah Copper, Steel, Union Pacific, Pennsylvania, New Haven, New York Central, Missouri Pacific, Erie, Chino and Amalgamated. American Ice issue declined.

New Haven held its strength when there was a general easing off. The rumor that Rockefeller interests are accumulating stock obtained some credence, and had considerable effect.

London heard from New York that the bank statement forecast was favorable and this helped American stocks in the former market. They ruled above parity.

Standard Oil and New Haven.

In Wall Street there is discussion of the possibility that Standard Oil will seek complete control of the New Haven road, in whose management, through William Rockefeller, it is already a power. It is stressed in fact, of combining with the house of Morgan for the financiering which has reduced stock valuation to the lowest price on record. The Morgan interest governed the policy of the road by controlling stock proxies. That dividends have been stopped it is thought it may not be able to command a majority vote.

To Curb Stock Issues.

Hearings are to begin at once before the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee upon the Adamson bills to give the Interstate Commerce Commission power to curb railroad stock watering practices.

"My bills," said Chairman Adamson, "provide that no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall increase its capital stock or bonded indebtedness or issue any certificates of debt until the purpose for which such securities are to be issued and the terms on which the securities are to be sold, either to a holding syndicate or otherwise, have been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission."

It is said at Washington that if the Interstate Commerce Commission had been given the power over issues in force the New Haven road would not be in its present straits.

Go-to-Church Day in Boston. Crowd All the Churches and Do Your Part in a Great Work

The AMERICAN suggests a GO-TO-CHURCH DAY in Boston.

Forty thousand persons went to church one Sunday recently in Joliet, the prison city of Illinois. Inasmuch as Joliet is a city of little more than 35,000 population, this indicates a totality of attendance and then some.

What brought out this abnormal and record-breaking attendance was the preliminary three weeks' campaign in which all ministers, priests, rabbis and divines of all denominations united in urging the citizenry to make one Sunday a general Go-to-Church day. The idea was crowned with great success.

Let Boston try it. We ought to assemble 500,000 or more at church some Sunday in early January.

Whatever is done to inspire people to go to church is done usually in the good-tempered competition of denominations to enlarge their membership and increase their own sphere. When anything unusual is done, it has taken the form of special services by renowned evangelists and choristers, or with the aid of extraordinary attractions in tent shows and camp meetings by peculiar sects.

This idea of Go-to-Church day is different and doubtless more efficacious.

The regular churches and chapels offer their customary services by their ordained pastors the same as usual—the sample being nowise different from what may be expected any day in the year—the idea being to engage every one to attend the church he or she prefers and hear the doctrine each believes.

So there is no proselyting, nothing that approaches an attempt of one church to gain at the expense of another, no rivalry, but a general movement by a UNIVERSAL INVITATION FROM ALL PULPITS TO ALL PEOPLE.

Since there are federations of the clergy, we suggest that they take this matter up among themselves first, and if all concur in the propriety it should be easy to agree upon a date.

The secular as well as religious press will be pleased to forward this movement by free and full publicity.

Boston is a God-fearing, church-attending community. Our ministers are earnest and able. They are carrying on their great work, some staggering under tremendous burdens, but all of earnest endeavor and eager to spread the gospel and build up their churches wherever they may be located.

These ministers deserve more than they are getting from this community. They are entitled to the support of EVERY MAN AND WOMAN in this city. They are building up the waste places and reclaiming humanity. They are seekers after truth and are spreading their knowledge of the truth wherever and whenever they can. They deserve the substantial support of those financially able to help, and every good work they are engaged in should be promoted conscientiously and determinedly to the end.

The GO-TO-CHURCH DAY suggestion should encourage the ministers. It ought to be easy to get 500,000 earnest men and women into the churches of Boston on the day set apart by the ministers for that purpose. This very large attendance will bring the churches and the ministers into a new and closer relationship with people who are not regular church attendants.

It will inspire the ministers to do better things than they are even now doing. It should be an incentive to men and women to regard church-going not only as a duty, but something to be looked forward to each Sunday with profit to the soul and mind and pleasure also.

The AMERICAN asks its readers to consider this GO-TO-CHURCH DAY suggestion, and to write to this newspaper briefly as to how it can best be made successful, with the largest possible results, making for greater religious strength in our city, extending civic virtue and righteousness and upholding those ministers who are doing God's duty toward men in a fearless way—and sometimes to not overcrowded churches.

And would it not be a good idea if the ministers would agree to select an identical text of Scripture, and each of them preach from that text on the day decided upon as inaugurating the new movement?

There is not the slightest doubt that GO-TO-CHURCH DAY can be made tremendously profitable, not only for the churches but for the entire community as well.

The Girls in the Shops Are Tired Already

Will You Not Try to Finish Your Christmas Buying Now Rather Than Make Conditions Worse?

Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company

At this time of the year keepers of stores cannot avoid hardships that weigh heavily upon their employes. Unfortunately the heartless indifference of the public increases the hardships unnecessarily.

Thousands of girls and young women are already tired, worn out in mind and in nerves, by the strain of the holiday season's work.

Will not the readers of this newspaper set a good example and do NOW the shopping that has been postponed?

Remember, that if you do not want to pay for what you buy now, you can make a deposit, always, and leave the order to deliver the goods when payment is made; but, better still, arrange to buy and to pay at once.

Realize that it is your duty to shop IN THE MORNING. Women especially can do this if they will.

In the morning, at a reasonable hour, they can go to the stores and leave the stores and avoid the rush hour on the street cars.

They can trade in stores that are not crowded, and deal with clerks, men and women, that are not exhausted, as at the end of a long day of hard work, standing on their feet.

Unfortunately, everybody says "shop early," and there is really very little improvement from year to year. This is because each one thinks "MY PARTICULAR SHOPPING WILL MAKE NO DIFFERENCE—THERE IS SO LITTLE OF IT."

But the readers of this newspaper alone—those that actually buy the paper—number more than 400,000.

Of these readers, all will buy something. And while each individually is not the problem, all together ARE.

Already the girls are tired, the patience and energy of the men in the delivery departments of the big stores are almost exhausted.

Do what you can to make Christmas cheerful, or at least bearable for those who wait upon you—from the man who manages a big business to the smallest employe in the basement.

AND DO YOUR BUYING NOW.

The Two Sisters

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XI.

CARYL MARVIN was due at Kelley Delaine's studio at ten o'clock, and she spent the last hour before leaving her room in performing her toilette. Her dainty lingerie shirtwaist was immaculate, and her blue serge skirt and jacket were carefully brushed. She would have donned a light Summer silk—her best dress—but Julia advised otherwise.

"I want to make a good first impression," Caryl declared.

"Then dress very simply," Julia counselled.

"It is better, Caryl, to begin at the bottom of the ladder and work up slowly, than to try to start in the middle and then come tumbling down."

"I'm not going to tumble," Caryl assured her. "Just watch me!"

"Well, good luck to you, dear," Julia said wistfully. She had prepared the usual breakfast and washed the dishes at the sink in the hall. "Take care of yourself, little sister. You are all I have, you know."

She stopped to kiss the girl the second time, and there was a look of almost maternal longing in her dark eyes as she watched Caryl begin her toilette.

A clock in the neighborhood was striking ten when Caryl Marvin stepped from the elevator in the building in which Kelley Delaine lived. The elevator boy pointed down the corridor.

"Mr. Delaine's apartment's down that hall to the left," he directed. As Caryl went in the direction indicated her heels made such a tapping sound on the floor that it seemed to her that the entire building echoed with the noise, and she walked, therefore, on her tiptoes. Her heart was beating fast, as she pushed the button over which was tacked a card bearing the name "Mr. Kelley Delaine." The door was opened at once by the author himself. His back was to the light, and Caryl could not see his face distinctly at first.

"Oh, good morning!" he said pleasantly. "I suppose you are the stenographer sent from the school, aren't you?"

"Yes," replied Caryl diffidently.

"Come right in," said the man, throwing open the door of his study. "Take off your hat and jacket and I will be with you in a moment."

Left alone, Caryl looked eagerly about her. The room was large and light, and comfortably, if plainly, furnished. There was a great rolltop desk by one window, and by the other a table on which stood a typewriter. Here, she supposed, was where she would sit. In the centre of the room was a table piled with books, magazines and papers, and at one side of this was a divan with a dark red couch cover. Everywhere there were books. The walls were lined with shelves of them, and the narrow mantel shelf had piles of them at both ends, although in the middle stood a clock. Behind this was a mirror into which Caryl glanced anxiously after removing her hat, then smiled with satisfaction. At this minute Delaine returned.

"Well," he said, "suppose we get right to work. What's the matter?"

For she had started in genuine surprise as the light fell full upon his face.

"N—nothing," she stammered, blushing scarlet. "only——"

"Only what?" he insisted. "What is it?"

"Nothing," she repeated, "only I've seen you before. You look like, surely"—with an outburst of contrition—"you are the person who saved me from getting killed by an automobile—don't you remember?"

The man looked at her keenly. "To be sure," he said, "you are the little girl who tried to run into a taxi one evening—aren't you? I didn't recognize you at first. Where's your sister?"

"Wh—what?" faltered Caryl.

"I say where's your sister? I remember her better than I do you."

The words were said with a blunt earnestness, and Caryl saw that the speaker did not intend to wound her vanity, yet she bridled slightly as she answered.

"My sister is at home, of course."

"Oh, then your home is here in Boston, is it?" asked Delaine.

"It is now," said Caryl, "we came to Boston some months ago—my sister and I."

"Why?" asked Delaine.

Caryl thought quickly. She would not tell this stunning-looking man the truth. She was ashamed to. The man noticed her hesitation and hastened to reassure her.

"Don't tell me if you prefer not to," he said kindly.

"Oh, that's all right," Caryl replied. "There's nothing much to tell. We left home because our father married a second time—a coarse, uncongenial woman. We have our own apartment here in Boston and I have decided to take up stenography, just for the experience and to prove that I could support myself if necessary."

"And your sister," asked Delaine. "What does she do"

"Oh, she is a writer," responded Caryl glibly. "She writes stories for the magazines and newspapers."

Then she stopped, astonished at her own skill in weaving romance.

Wheat Raising and How It Has Helped Man

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

SOME recent discoveries concerning the life of man in the earlier stages of his existence on the earth induce me to return to a subject about which I have once or twice written a brief article for the thoughtful readers of the Hearst newspapers.

The name of "Prehistory" is given to the period covered by the six great epochs ending with the Magdalenian, during which man was gradually developing his inventive powers and making his physical organization more subservient to his mind. During this time he became a primitive mechanician and artist. But the principal material with which he had to work was stone, whence the term "Stone Age" applied to the whole period.

But there were two stones ages—the Paleolithic, or Old Stone Age, and the Neolithic, or New Stone Age. Prehistory belongs entirely to the Old Stone Age. The epochs of the New Stone Age are not so systematically defined, although they witnessed a transformation of man sufficiently great to place him on a vastly higher plane, and led in time to his mastery of metals and the dawn in succession of the Age of Bronze and the Age of Iron.

During the prehistoric epochs of the Paleolithic Age man was a dweller in caverns and under rude shelters in river valleys, and he lived principally by hunting and fishing. With the beginning of the Neolithic Age, while he did not abandon altogether his old manner of living, he began to cultivate the soil, developed a rude sort of agriculture and raised domestic animals. It is to this period that the recent discoveries to which I have referred pertain.

One of the most clearly defined of the earliest epochs of the Neolithic Age is called the Asilian, from the cavern of the Mas-d'Azil in the Pyrenees, where many relics of the men of that time have been found. Here, for instance, have been discovered specimens of wheat which the people of that time cultivated. The same grain has been found in many other locations in Europe which were occupied by men of the Asilian and other early Neolithic epochs.

One of the latest discoveries is in Switzerland, where the fact has been recognized that this ancient wheat is identical with a kind that is today cultivated in the Canton of Fribourg, especially to producing straw for weaving purposes. Better species of wheat have since been developed for man's consumption, but it is interesting to learn that our predecessors so early discovered the best of all grains for food.

Several other kinds of grain have also been found among the deposits left by Neolithic man, among them being barley, rye and oats. But the wheat is much more abundant than the rye, while the quantity of barley cultivated seems to have been much greater than that of oats.

Flax was cultivated, but the species was different from that preferred today, although it yet grows wild in countries surrounding the Mediterranean Sea.

Fruit culture appears to have been neglected, although there is proof that wild fruits were eaten, particularly small apples and pears, which were usually halved or quartered and then dried. One of these ancient species of pears is still found in Switzerland under the name of achras.

One of the most interesting results of the investigations is the evidence obtained that the new people of the Neolithic Age were, in part at least, invaders from the direction of Asia. The wheat that they cultivated at various places in Europe was, in the opinion of Zaborowski, of Asiatic origin, and they must have brought it with them at the time of their irruption into the Mediterranean lands. Wheat of Egyptian origin is also found in the places inhabited by the Neolithic peoples of Western Europe.

In these scattered facts one can dimly perceive the course of a dramatic history for antedating the earliest recorded acts of man, during which hordes of strangers descended from Asia upon Europe, as similar hordes have done within historic time, drove out, exterminated or amalgamated with themselves the original inhabitants and introduced new customs, new ideas and a new stimulus to progress.

Whoever or whatever these invaders may have been, their coming was evidently the beginning of a revolution in human affairs which did not count until the invention of bronze and the discovery of processes for the working of iron placed the human race on the highway that led up to a true civilization.

Parents and Children—The Most Important Duties of Parenthood Are Often Left to the Teachers. What Are You Doing for Your Children?

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company

"IT is an appalling fact that this institution, preservative of all institutions, if it is to be judged by some modern homes, is actually in danger of becoming a serious menace to American life and national righteousness. The well-regulated home, where there is mutual affection and respect, a kind and just exercise of authority, unquestioning obedience, mutual helpfulness, and the cherishing of those great principles which lie at the foundation of the Christian religion, is the only hope for the larger and national life. Without such homes the people of this country cannot expect, and have no right to expect, a government that will maintain justice, equity, and right, and whose social order and institutions will be perpetuated.

"For the most part father has degenerated into or been succeeded by 'daddy' or 'dad,' who is merely a convenient fellow, when he happens to be at home, for a riotous romp or for receiving orders to buy this or that, and who has no more authority or influence in the family government than one of the 'kids.' While mother—well, as a general rule, nurse has taken her place in the home, and frequently an incapable and unconscientious nurse whose influence is anything but good.

"The 'kids' (there are no children now), instead of being taught self-denial, self-restraint, and respect for others and for the rights of others, demand and are yielded the fullest measure of unregulated liberty and license and self-indulgence; in other words, they are practically left to rear themselves according to their own 'sweet wills.'

"Much might also be said of the lamentable lack of parental care and oversight as to the daily and nightly whereabouts of the larger sons and daughters, the doubtful character of the entertainments frequented by them, and the demoralising literature admitted into the home, as well as other threatening evils."

—WM. E. THORINGTON.

HOW LARGE THY TASK?

HOW large thy task, O teacher of the young!
To take the ravelled threads by parents flung
With careless hands—and through consummate care
To weave a fabric, fine and firm and fair;
God's uncompleted work is thine to do—
Be brave and true.

—ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

MANY parents who read the words of Mr. Thorington will resent them. Yet they are needed words and painfully true of a large percentage of American homes and parents.

Are you a parent of grown children? If so, just what do you know of their methods of enjoyment, outside the home, or even at home?

Do you take a sympathetic interest in all their pleasures, and do you try to make them feel you are their friend, and that you have not forgotten your own youth?

Are they on such happy terms with you that they tell you all their little secrets and talk over all their hopes and ambitions and longings? Have you made your own son feel respect and a high sense of responsibility toward all women?

Does he understand that sex relations are sacred matters, and that any light or low view of the subject is fraught with enormous dangers for him and for his descendants?

Unless a young man knows this, from the scientific and medical side, he is not well equipped to go about seeking for social pleasures in safety. He is in danger himself, and he is liable to become a menace to those with whom he associates.

Has your young daughter any knowledge of herself as a woman and a possible mother of another generation, which will protect her from disaster, morally or physically?

Possibly, being your daughter, you feel she must be safe from doing any foolish or wrong act.

But you must remember how many other ancestors have given her tendencies and qualities and impulses of which you know nothing.

First and foremost she is a human being, a part of nature, and she will pass through the same stages of development which flowers and plants and animals pass through.

Just as the tree buds and then flowers, and then bears fruit, so every normal woman experiences these instincts to carry on nature's work.

But she cannot perform these functions as naturally and frankly as the things in the vegetable and animal kingdom do, she needs guidance and protection through the romantic bud and flower period of her unfoldment. Tendencies which an unkind and undiscriminating world might call evil are simply natural tendencies for mating and bearing offspring. They show themselves in romantic impulses and a desire to enjoy the society of the opposite sex.

That desire should be gratified, but it should be guided and protected.

Do you know what hours she keeps with her callers, and when she visits her girl friends, do you know what places they visit and who are their escorts, and what hour she reaches her rooms?

If you are parents of small children, are you giving them any foundation of good manners and agreeable behavior and kindly instincts, which make them tractable students when they begin to attend school, and will cause the tendrils of their young minds to reach up to lovely qualities, instead of trailing down into the dust of selfishness and the mire of immorality?

The most important duties of parenthood are often cast on the burdened shoulders of teachers.

Having brought a child into the world and to a school age is not all of the responsibility of a father and mother. Not even when accompanied by generosity and a willingness to pay teachers to do the work neglected at home.

Nothing can ever quite recompense a child who has reached the age of ten without having received the loving, careful training of a patient mother or father in the small, gracious things which make up daily conduct.

Any parent, however poor, can teach a child to speak low, to avoid flat contradictions, to be respectful to elders, to sit correctly, to partake of food silently and enter and leave a room gracefully. So, too, can any parent who has right instincts, avoid having a child hear gossip or unkind criticism or coarse language.

Are you doing all these things?

Cheese

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

DON'T hanker for pork chops or beefsteaks,
Says the Government, eager to please.
If you can't raise the price, take official advice,
And live upon crackers and cheese.
The tariff we've passed has put sirloin
Beyond you, but why should you care?
Go get in the habit of eating Welsh rabbit
Or succulent soft Camembert.

Some good Gorgonzola for breakfast,
A half pound of Roquefort for lunch,
And some fromage de brie for your dinner or tea
Will fill you with vigor and punch.
A big slab of Edam at midnight
Will drive sluggard sleep from your eyes,
And a Parmesan stew at about half-past two
Will prove a diverting surprise.

You'll soon lose your liking for mutton,
Fried liver you never will miss,
If for three meals a day you will just put away
Large portions of pale porous Swiss.
And if by some chance you are weakly,
And feel that you can't hold your own,
Eat as much as you please of rich Limburger cheese,
And people will leave you alone.

This diet that we've recommended
Is suited to old and to young;
It's made a great hit, and we're free to admit
It's the greatest idea we've sprung.
You say it's more costly than meat is,
That cheese costs a whale of a price?
Well, well! We should care! That's quite your affair,
We merely supply the advice!
